Dear Dr. Isenberg,

I feel that I am beginning to know you, first through our telephone conversations, and then through Carson's letters. Her letters told me a great deal more about her--and answered some of my questions, certainly, that I had noted on my "interview sheet" for you. Again, I apologize if some of my questions seemed abrupt or too probing.

Can we meet sometime soon and talk for a little while? I have a tentative interview set up with a lady in Atlanta next Friday morning, the 19th, relative to Carson. Could we possibly get together Thursday night, the 18th? I'll be arriving that day at about 6:30 P.M. and could see you then, for an early evening--leaving you free later; or we could get together later--8:30 or 9:00, possibly. Or would possibly lunch together on Friday, so as not to interfere with your professional schedule, suit you?

Lois Thompson, my research assistant, will be with me, but we will be staying overnight with her friends; thus we can meet with her or not, depending on your choice.

I am sorry that I troubled you in late January during the stress of your sister's critical illness. It was so very kind of you to go out of your way to help me as you did, and I am most grateful. Thank you for sharing Carson with me as you did. Her letters to you gave me much insight into that elusive child-woman who seemed to ambivalate between wounded sparrow and iron butterfly.

Just a note or card will do if you have time to let me know if I may see on this particular trip. I look forward to our meeting--beyond those few seconds outside your car in a blustery cold wind!

With best regards--

Virginia Carr
