COLLEGIATE POLITICOS ARE CONFUSED

Leaders of the forthcoming mock Republican national convention at Washington and Lee University appear to be having their troubles getting together on G.O.P. presidential candidates. Fred M. Vinson, Jr. (left), of Washington, D. C., W. & L. student body president who will serve as collegiate counterpart of the Republican National Committee chairman, argues a point with Beverly T. Fitzpatrick (seated, center), of Roanoke, Va., chairman of the convention, and Jack B. Coulter, of Roanoke, convention secretary. The trio of "GOP leaders" are shown at the collegiate version of "Republican National Headquarters" on the Washington and Lee campus in Lexington where the students will renew on April 21-21 the mock affair staged quadrennially for 40 years.
