Washington Society Celebration.

Of course it was muddy Thursday night, it seems as if mud and society celebrations were one and inseparable now and forever; the only wonder is that it was not snowing and raining all at once. But this is a common subject of remark so let us pass it by.

The program was, on the whole, a good one, especially the debate.

The president in his well known style made the address of welcome, referring to the illustrious George, as is usual on similar occasions, and telling something of what Wash. had done this year. He then introduced the first orator of the evening, Mr. W. B. Wade of Va., subject "Some Phases of the Old Regime." The speaker commenced by saying that the old South had its disadvantages as well as advantages; then followed a glowing picture of "De days befo' de War." The Southern woman can never be too much praised and Mr. Wade dwelt at great length upon the charms of the antebellum maiden, but gracefully said that she could not surpass the girl of today. The theme of the oration is one that has had much handling but it will stand much more. We can never be reminded too often of the glories of the days that are gone for nothing so inspires us ourselves to new efforts.

The second orator was Mr. T. C. Wilson of Va., whose subject was "Modern Spain." This was original and the speaker handled it very well; taking up Spain's history he briefly mentioned some of her past achievements and her gradual decay, prophesying her final triumph. It was a well planned and well delivered speech and has won many compliments for Mr. Wilson.

President Ott announced the debate and Secretary Spenser read the question, which was, "Resolved, That it would be wise and expedient for the United States to form a defensive and offensive alliance with England." The choice of the question was most excellent.

Mr. Sanders of Ky., opened on the affirmative, laying especial emphasis on the religious view of the question, holding that by alliance with England the cause of Christianity would be furthered. The similarity of Great Britain and America in regard to language and origin was also brought out. The most striking thing about Mr. Sanders' debate was its absolute clearness from beginning to end, a most essential thing, and we prophesy for him a distinguished career in the future.

Mr. Woodson opened for the negative in an able and eloquent though not closely connected, speech. If the speaker could have had time to familiarize himself more thoroughly with his notes the effect would have been greatly heightened. As it was the main parts of his speech were very powerful and convincing.

Mr. Turner was the next speaker on the affirmative. He discussed the international political situation and alliances which were being formed. He also scored good points in regard to China and our commerce with the East, which is constantly increasing.

Mr. B. M. Hartman closed for the negative in a ringing speech, which all will agree in pronouncing an able effort. The speaker compared the English and American ideas of liberty and government and showed how different they were and how utterly impossible it would be to form an alliance between the two which would not be harmful to the U. S.

The judges awarded the medals as follows: Orators, T. C. Wilson; debaters, B. M. Hartman.

We must not forget to speak of the glee club, which furnished the music for the occasion. We have long wanted to see this done and hope it will be continued in the future, for it is an excellent idea and surely no one could complain of the music which our boys furnish.

Do not laugh at the man with demure face, fringed trousers and battered hat; he may once have been connected with a college paper.—Ex.

Chapel Exercises.

After the many controversies as to the relative value of scientific and classical education with which we have been entertained of late, the address of Mr. A. T. Barclay of Virginia, on the War Alumni of Washington College was a most pleasing innovation. No better evidence is needed to show how much Mr. Barclay's address was enjoyed than the intense interest with which his audience followed him from start to finish.

As an introduction to his remarks he spoke of the inestimable value of loyal alumni to a University and how Washington and Lee had been blessed with such, and also gave a glimpse of college life in the time of our civil war.

Those young students who marched away in the days of '61 to fight for the flag they honored, were not in their college career disturbed by educational controversies and the economies then taught were of a political nature.

They read with growing interest the debates in congress and the speeches of those who championed the cause of the South.

The spirit of the times soon became local and its first symptoms were shown in the spirited declamations of the students in their societies. The Southern flag was hoisted on the college buildings and graced the statue of the "Father of his Country" which so often in succeeding years has borne the decorations of enthusiastic students.

Military companies were formed and the campus converted in a parade ground where the volunteers sought to acquire skill in the use of arms.

When they had become mustered into the Confederate service and encountered those who were their seniors in age and experience their lewdless faces and boyish appearance made them the object of much jest, but after the battle of Manassas where, in the most dangerous portion of the field they faced the enemy's fire and became identified with the famous Stonewall Brigade, there was no soldier whose respect and admiration they had not won. While, perhaps, it cannot be said that their brigade won the battle of Bull Run, yet it is certain that it alone made victory possible.

Though they did not always drive the enemy from a position, they were never driven from one.

The conduct of the Liberty Hall volunteers won for them the highest esteem of Gen. Jackson, who made them his body-guard, except on the field of action, from which, he said, such soldiers could not be spared.

Mr. Barclay, paid a splendid tribute to their heroic captain, Jas. J. White, as a professor, gentleman and soldier. His encouraging words gave them new strength to resist the onsets of the enemy when they were worn and weary from the exertion of battle.

In the thirty-two battles of the Liberty Hall volunteers their ranks became sorely thinned, but they enjoyed the singular honor of being the only distinctive college company which served throughout the war.

At the Theatre.

The theatre was crowded last evening to see Scott's Minstrel troupe, in a very up-to-date performance. The company is composed entirely of colored singers and there are some very good voices among them.

Of the "end men" Clarence Powell was easily the favorite, his singing of the rag time melodies and his grotesque grimaces keeping the audience in a continual fit of laughter. The last part of the program, containing a number of splendid specialties, among which the clever trick bicycle act by Arthur Maxwell, Valin and Goodman in musical conceits, Harry Craton in a slack wire performance are especially to be mentioned.

"Richie," a Japanese, also introduced some excellent "stunts" in hand balancing.—La Crosse (Wis.) Chronicle, Sept. 16, '99.

The address delivered at Chapel Wednesday morning was highly appreciated by all present. The subject, although interesting in itself, was rendered more so by the excellent manner in which it was handled by the speaker. One point brought forth by him seems to be especially deserving of attention, that is the need of an holiday in memory of the valor and achievements of the Washington and Lee boys who enlisted in '61. Other institutions have adopted this plan of honoring their soldier alumni. The V. M. I., although the part played by the cadet corps in the late war was very small as compared with the Liberty Hall Volunteers, celebrates the anniversary of the battle of New Market with a holiday and appropriate exercises. As it is, we are not afflicted with a great number of holidays, and if one day marking the anniversary of some battle were set aside for this purpose, it would not make the number excessive.

In another place will be found a communication in regard to the order, or rather, disorder, at the Washington Celebration. It certainly is a matter of regret that this should be the case, and, although carried on in a spirit of jest, will have a detrimental effect upon the work of the societies. Although, as the writer says, a large part of the confusion was caused by students, with all due respect we would add, that it was increased by the conversation and the passing of notes by the younger members of the opposite sex. Instead of stopping this, two of the younger and inexperienced ushers seemed to think that their duties included those of a messenger boy, and one managed to make himself especially conspicuous and detract the attention of the audience from the speaker.

Of course, the confusion that arose from this and other sources was not intended to mar the pleasure of those who had come to listen, but it should be stopped, as it tends to turn an exhibition of the most important work of the University into a farce.

The Doctors.

Rev. James A. Quarles, D. D., of Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va., delivered a splendid address in the Reform Church here last night to the pupils of Massanutten Academy. His theme was "There is One in Every Home and Yet You Never Saw It—The Human Mind." Despite the snow-storm there was a large crowd present, and the address was highly appreciated.—Woodstock special to Sunday Dispatch.

The annual celebration of the Phi Beta Kappa was held at William and Mary College Monday night and after an eloquent oration by Mr. Thomas Nelson Page, whose subject was "Character, the True Test of Civilization," an elegant banquet was served in the library of the College. Among those initiated into the society this year were Dr. H. A. White and Thomas Nelson Page.

Dr. Currell delivered an address Thursday night at Lynchburg at the Y. M. C. A. Hall under the auspices of the Lynchburg Teachers Club. His subject was "More Beyond in Life and Literature."

Professor-elect Burks was the guest of Dean Tucker several days this week.

Among the recent naval promotions the name of Paymaster Walter L. Wilson, son of President Wilson, appears.

Miss Sue Wellford of Richmond, and Miss Sallie Scott of Warrenton, N. C., who have been the guests of Mrs. H. A. White, returned home Saturday last.

A Dhlighful Evening.

Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Corse entertained the Card Club on the occasion of its last ante-lenten meeting. In spite of the inclemency of the weather, a boy's size edition of last year's blizzard having struck Lexington, twenty couples vied with each other for the various prizes which were in keeping with the hosts regal entertainment of their guests—both handsome and in good taste. At eight thirty the guests began to arrive and before nine Mr. Corse's home on Trafalgar avenue was crowded with a merry throng of players. At nine the game, euchre, was in full swing and nothing but the unquenchable buzz of female conversation invariably ending in the refrain, "What's trumps?" could be heard until the sable Gynymedes and Hebes brought the grateful refreshments to the hungry players. After man and woman had partaken to their satisfaction the hosts sent the Goddess of Pleasure among the male portion of the company, despatching them to the smoking department so that the gentler sex could discuss their merits and demerits at leisure. The writer of this unlucky happens to be a man (by courtesy) so was barred from the discussion in the parlor but learned much about the wiles wicked youths use in leading their elders astray while pulling on the business end of one of the hosts' choice havanas. When the ladies had satisfied themselves in picking our fragile frames to pieces we were again summoned to try our luck under Dame Fortune's wings. As assistants the aforesaid dame had Master Seumes and Miss Nellie Brockenbrough to award the signs of victory, both of whom were singularly reticent in their treatment of the writer. But others fared better and Mrs. M. L. Turner for the women and Mr. R. L. Owen for the men wore the colors of the favorites. The names of the boobies are suppressed out of regard for their feelings. At twelve o'clock the party dispersed, each going to his (or her as the case may be) home with the feeling that he was indebted to Mr. and Mrs. Corse for at least one most delightful evening.

Y. M. C. A. Convention.

The twenty-third annual session of the Young Men's Christian Association of Virginia met in Hampton February 15-18. While the convention was not as well attended as was expected, yet it was very interesting and profitable. There were one hundred and sixty-five delegates in attendance and of these about forty were from colleges. The convention was opened with a song service led by Mr. Towson of Philadelphia. This was followed by a "Quiet Hour" conducted by Rev. Mr. Hurlburt, President of Pennsylvania Bible Institute. Among the most interesting and helpful features of the convention were the Bible readings and addresses of Mr. Hurlburt. He impressed all who heard him as being a man of great spiritual power. Some helpful suggestions were given in papers on "What Some Associations Are Doing:" (1) In Work for New Students (by Mr. Stevens of William and Mary College), (2) In Developing Bible Study (by Mr. Sowell, of Richmond College), (3) In Reaching Non-Christian Students (by Mr. Bell of Hampden-Sidney). Sessions were held morning, evening and night. The report of the State Executive Committee showed the condition of the association to be encouraging. There are forty-eight associations with a membership of 6854. The outlook in college work is encouraging. There are twenty-eight Bibles classes in thirteen colleges; the missionary department is in better condition than ever before. There are two facts, though, that should set to thinking college men interested in this work. The average number of men in attendance upon the meetings during the year and the number of actual conversions was smaller than for some years. Certainly these facts should stir us up to more active work. There were two conferences for college men, one on "Methods of Carrying on Missionary Work," the other on "The Spiritual Awakening in Our Colleges." These conferences, which were very interesting and profitable, were conducted by Mr. H. M. Mellhany, Jr., so long a student of W. and L. U., now College Secretary of the International Committee, and Mr. Smith, State College Secretary. On Saturday the delegates representing the different departments of the work were dined at the various churches. The people were most hospitable in their reception and all were very favorably impressed with "Crabtown." BETA.

Editor Ring-tum Phi :

As an alumnus of W. & L. U. I feel that I may claim space in your paper for a few words about the celebration of the Washington Society Thursday night.

At the outset I wish to say that the celebration itself was fully up to the average, intermediate, and the speeches were well worth hearing ; therefore, it is with no intention of literary criticism that I write. Nor do I wish to be unduly harsh with regard to the matters which I shall mention, but I think something should be said at once to call the attention of students to the impression made Thursday night upon an outsider.

In a general way I would remark that there seemed to be a tendency on the part of the students to make the celebration a failure. This they tried to do, to all appearances, by deliberately "guying" certain of the speakers at times, and by keeping up a continual buzz of conversation and other noises in the lower part of the hall. In the rear part of the gallery were quite a number of small boys and two or three students. The latter, instead of suppressing the "kids" whose noise was what might have been expected from a crowd of youngsters, seemed to encourage the hub-bub, and even to take a prominent part in it. The result was that the evening, which should have been most pleasant, with its good speeches and good music, proved to be a period of confusion and vexation.

In all kindness and interest I would like to remind the students that if this sort of thing is allowed to continue, the reputation of our beloved Alma Mater will be jeopardized. The remedy lies with the students themselves. The movers in these disturbances are few in number, and their actions do not meet with the sanction of the majority of the student body. I am sure there is a strong sentiment against rowdyism, and the only way to stop it is to let that be seen and felt wherever it is needed.

The men have apparently forgotten the tradition of the institution, which gives to the intermediate speakers a courteous hearing. The students, moreover, are the hosts on this occasion, and it is not seemly that their guests should be made uncomfortable.

Much may be accomplished by the marshals if they do their duty, but they should bear in mind that one of their duties is the preservation of order. There was a commendable effort made Thursday night on the part of the chief marshal to lessen the confusion, but he failed because he was almost totally without support.

I trust, Mr. Editor, that I may be pardoned these remarks ; they spring from a heartfelt interest in Washington and Lee and in her grand literary societies.

ALUMNUS.

Editor Ring-tum Phi :

The junior law class has within the last week set itself up as an example of purity and perfection by expelling from its organization a young man whose actions in money matters did not quite come up to the class' ideal of what one who enjoyed its fellowship should do. The class has done well so far but it is hoped that this is merely a beginning, for from what we hear the junior law class is still the fold of black sheep, so black indeed that night shines as noon-day when these members walk abroad. It is said that charity begins at home but this class has extended its purifying vote into the distant state of Connecticut and so far has entirely overlooked the aspersions cast upon it by the rest of the University as regards crimes perpetrated on the soil of old Virginia. The strength of the southern university is in its honor system, the strength of its honor system is in the integrity of the students, and when by quiet acquiescence the students allow the system to be abused, the system falls and the University falls for lack of support. Men of the junior law class, you have started the purification—see that it does not stop until every rumor, every aspersion cast upon you and your class has been investigated, the innocent vindicated, the guilty punished and your class freed from the evil talk that now makes it the cynosure of the whole university. You have blighted the life of a youth whose boyish follies prejudiced the student body against him. Let it not be said that this prejudice was the cause of his expulsion but vindicate yourselves by investigating the imputations cast upon you by the rest of the collegemen.
