Elrod toasts alcohol awareness

by Polly Doig
NEWS EDITOR

Last week, to coincide with National Alcohol Awareness Week as well as Parents Weekend, Washington and Lee University President John Elrod sent out a letter to students' parents regarding campus alcohol abuse.

Citing the need for a partnership between administrators, faculty, students, trustees, parents and alumni, Elrod acknowledged the existence of "the serious health problem" of alcohol abuse at W&L.

Elrod's letter comes at a time when a nationwide outcry for recognition of binge drinking and alcohol abuse is being made. With the goal of heightening awareness about the widespread binge drinking that takes place on campuses, National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week kicked off last Monday in Washington, D.C.

"We have to send the message that drinking can be dangerous, underage drinking is illegal, and letting it happen is wrong," Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala said at the kickoff.

A little closer to home, Elrod and W&L are working toward the same ends.

"Washington and Lee University is not immune to this national collegiate health problem," read part of Elrod's letter. "We are working hard to understand the attitudes and habits of our students regarding alcohol and to find the right response to this issue. . . Much work has already been done."

Several student activities were also designed to increase understanding of alcohol and its potential consequences in observance of National Alcohol Awareness Week on the W&L campus.

Students had the opportunity this week to take Alcohol 101, which is an interactive computer simulation game of drinking that brings home some of the possible side effects. Each player attends a party, chooses how much to drink and can experience the residual effects and consequences of alcohol use. The game took place in the Commerce School computer lab Monday through Wednesday and in the GHQ on Thursday.

Students also coordinated a media campaign and distributed posters, bookmarks and table tents across campus.

Generals win in final seconds

The ecstatic Generals celebrate their victory following the successful 42-yard field goal by freshman Brad Wiginton in the final seconds of Saturday's game. Though only their second win of the season, the Generals played intensely to overcome an early 14-point deficit and claim a 23-21 victory in front of the Parents' Weekend crowd.

Social deviants travel to Europe

by Tarah Grant
EXECUTIVE EDITOR

This spring term, ten students will leave Lexington three weeks before finals and not finish their academic term until almost two weeks after graduation. These students will not be acting with deviancy; rather, they will be studying deviancy—in Europe.

Sociology Professor David Novack will teach a six-credit course this spring term titled Deviance in Cross Cultural Perspective: Being Jewish in Central Europe. When most students get ready to register for winter term, those who are interested in Novack's Sociology 406 will need to start thinking about spring term now. Novack will hold an informational meeting and slide show 7 p.m. Wednesday in Newcomb 28B.

Students in Sociology 406 will examine the Jewish life in Central Europe from World War II to the present. From April 19 to May 7 on campus, students will study deviance theory, with readings focusing on Jewish history. On May 12, they will depart for Central Europe. "Students will study the experience where it took place," Novack said. "It's also an opportunity to go places where you wouldn't normally go."

Students will spend 12 days touring and sightseeing in Central Europe, going to Vienna, Prague, Budapest, Belgrade and Krakow. They will listen to guest lectures by specialists on Jewish life and visit relevant historic sites including synagogues, Jewish cemeteries and Auschwitz.

Novack, who has never been to Auschwitz, said he is still a little uncomfortable when he thinks about visiting the grounds of the Nazis' infamous death camp. "It's not going to be a pleasant experience, but it will be a meaningful one," Novack said. "It's evidence of the dark side of humanity."

From May 25 to June 13, students will attend class sessions at the American University in Bulgaria (AUBG). AUBG, which receives roughly 50 percent of its funding from the United States government, is housed in the buildings of the former communist headquarters. Because Bulgaria was the only Nazi ally during WWII where the country's king refused to turn over its Jewish citizens to the Nazi regime, Novack said AUBG is an appropriate setting for the final portion of the course.

At AUBG, W&L students will share their classroom with students from AUBG and Mary Baldwin College. "Class sessions will focus on a comparative analysis of the normality and stigma of being Jewish in Central Europe," Novack said.

The program is unusual in that it

Bicenquingenary Ball gets rolling

by Tarah Grant
EXECUTIVE EDITOR

Students and faculty received invitations this week to the Bicenquingenary Ball. However, with no posters on campus and no advertisements in the newspapers, few know anything about the ball.

Co-chair of the 250th Ball Committee Erin McGrain says the clandestine nature is intentional. The committee wants everyone to be surprised when they enter the Warner Center on Nov. 14. The evening will be "simple, elegant, and classy," McGrain said.

"The ball is basically the largest student-component of the 250th celebration," Mandy Stallard, the other co-chair of the ball committee, said. "It is something that every member of the W&L community can attend to feel the spirit and excitement of this momentous occasion."

The 250th Ball weekend will start on Friday, Nov. 13 with a Widespread Panic concert in the Student Pavilion.

On Saturday, the 250th Ball will transform Doremus Gymnasium into a three dimensional yearbook. Ball attendees will dance and mingle among images from the university's past. Projectors will display images from "Come Cheer for Washington and Lee," the 250th celebration book, on two large screens in Doremus, and enlarged photographs from the book will decorate the hallways of the Warner Center.

Student Co-Chair of the 250th Committee Nate Tencza said they modeled the ball after the Mock Con Gala, but they are trying to make it "just a bit classier."

The Students Activities Board and the 250th Ball Committee selected a band called The Chairmen of the Board to entertain ball attendees. McGrain describes the band's music as a mix between swing and shag. "It's like beach music but a little more jazzy," she said.

The Chairmen of the Board has toured internationally, with concerts in such places as London's Hammer-Smith Odeon Theater and New York City's Apollo Theater. The band has also appeared on Dick Clark's "American Bandstand," Johnny Carson's "Tonight Show," Don Cornelius' "Soul Train," and have shared the stage with such legends as BB King, Jackie Wilson, The Isley Brothers, Earth Wind & Fire, The Four Tops, Nancy Wilson and the Spinners.

According to Neil Penick, director of the 250th observance, the committee chose to hold the ball only in the small gym and keep the decorations simple because they did not want it to compete with the annual Fancy Dress Ball. "The 250th Ball will be intentionally not as extravagant as FD," said Penick.

The tentative ticket price will also be less extravagant than FD: $30 for a single ticket, $45 for a couple. The memorabilia package includes two champagne flutes and two t-shirts, Stallard said. Tickets for the ball will go on sale Nov. 9 in the University Center.

Poetic justice rocks Diamond Street

by Lora Ellison
STAFF WRITER

Had you been strolling down Diamond Street last Tuesday night, your eye might have been caught by a multitude of flickering candles coming from #113.

Upon a closer look, you would have seen about 30 students gathered on couches, beanbags and the floor, all listening intently to various students pour forth their souls through their own poetry.

Sophomore Susan Slim resounded bitingly, "You're just not the marrying type, he tells me, his fitted navy blue baseball cap tucked behind his ears. . . You're an eyebrow piercing, I don't give a fk kind of girl. He does not know me." One after another, people took turns at the mic, alternating between poems and songs, inducing both tears and stomach gripping laughter.

No, you haven't been teleported to Oberlin or one of those strange hippie schools. You're still at W&L, conservative focal point of the college universe; but on Tuesday, Oct. 20, the Society for the Arts made a breakthrough and held this year's first open mic night for poetry, fiction and music.

Senior Whit Morris opened the evening with a sultry reading of "Smooove B" from the Internet, which was later compared to the dialog of the chef from Comedy Central's "South Park." This casual beginning, along with a supportive group of people, made this the perfect environment for untucking your shirt, relaxing and sharing a little bit of creativity. The various breaks also allowed the students to get to know the people to whom they'd been listening.

Most of the attending students shared an overwhelming excitement at the success of the gathering. "I've been waiting for something like this since I started going to school here," junior Jessica Helm said. "There are some very interesting people here, and they finally have a place to gather together."

The Society for the Arts has been dwindling over the last few years, but students such as juniors Childs Cantey, Ashley Marano and Caroline Cobb are working hard to build it back up again.

"We want to promote the diverse talents of the students on campus," Cobb said.

In the future, they plan to hold

Sociology 406 is only one of the Washington and Lee courses that will be taught abroad this spring term.

Politics professors Lewis John and William Connelly will teach a course called "British Politics in London." In addition to studying the fundamentals of the British government, students will compare the British and American political systems. The first four weeks of the class will be taught in London, and the last two will be held in Lexington. Applications are available from the professors and are due on Nov. 12.

Two art courses will be taught in Italy. Professor Kathleen Olson-Janjic will teach an art history and studio course titled Drawing Italy. High Renaissance in Florence and Rome, an art history course, will be taught by Assistant Professor George Bent. Both classes will spend the first two weeks of spring term on campus and the last four abroad.

by Heather McDonald
NEWS WRITER

Commonwealth Attorney Gordon Saunders charged two former Washington and Lee women with grand larceny last week in connection with the theft of 1,500 copies of The Ring-tum Phi.

Ellen Elliott and Stephanie Fortener, both 19, are each charged with unauthorized use of a vehicle and grand larceny, both felonies. Elliott is also charged with driving under the influence and refusal to take a Breathalyzer test.

The charges of unauthorized use of a vehicle are for taking two cars from Goad's Body Shop on Route 11, and using them to drive back to campus.

The charges of grand larceny result from the theft of approximately 1,500 copies of the Oct. 12 issue of The Ring-tum Phi.

The two charges are separate felonies in separate jurisdictions. The charge of unauthorized use of a vehicle occurred in Rockbridge County, outside the City of Lexington jurisdiction. The charge of grand larceny occurred within the City of Lexington.

"The Commonwealth Attorney will prosecute the theft of the paper himself. Our responsibility basically at this point is only that of witness," Chief of Security Mike Young said about W&L's role in the trial.

Elliott and Fortener cannot be brought up before the Executive Committee for honor violations because they withdrew from the University prior to the Phi theft.

The plaintiff in the grand larceny case is Washington and Lee University; the case will be fought on behalf of the student body because the Phi is the property of the student body. Approximately one-third of the Phi's budget is provided through student activity fees, a mandatory fee each student pays at the beginning of the school year.

The Student Body Constitution states that: "The Activities Fee shall entitle the payer to yearly subscriptions to The Ring-tum Phi..." The EC allocates an amount each year to the Phi to provide an issue of the Phi for each member of the student body without an additional subscription or extra cost.

The Phi also had an obligation to its advertisers to make sure that the paper was properly distributed so they had to have the stolen copies reprinted. The Phi editorial board decided that it needed to bring this incident to the attention of the Commonwealth Attorney.

"We want students to know that we aren't just playing journalists," Phi Executive Editor Tarah Grant said. "We put a lot of time into each issue and we take our work seriously. You can't just throw away an entire week's issues because you don't like a story, and then have your daddy send us a check."

Grant would like the court to order that the women do some community service hours in addition to working to pay for the reprints themselves.

Many students were at first confused as to why the Phi wasn't distributed Oct. 12, and then were angered.

"The students I talked to seemed fairly upset about it," Young said.

Sophomore Georgie Hickam, a journalism student, heard about the incident and e-mailed the Phi on the evening the papers were stolen. She asked that the editors consider republishing the edition in order for the story to be printed.

"I couldn't believe these two girls were stupid enough to steal a car in the first place," Hickam said. "And then they thought by threatening, they could prevent the press from printing a story."

In order to get the story out, Journalism Professor John Jennings took matters into his own hands. He printed copies of the front page by cutting individual stories and reducing them on a copier machine, then re-pasting them to a new sheet to form a mini-edition of the Phi. He then passed out the mini-edition to his classes Tuesday morning.

The Richmond Times-Dispatch and The Roanoke Times published stories about the incident last Friday and Saturday, respectively. Newschannel 10 in Roanoke also covered the story during a break of Friday's "Today Show."

The initial incident took place Wednesday, Oct. 1. Elliott and Fortener went to Berky's Restaurant with friends after a party. They decided to leave, and began walking home. Around 3:50 a.m. Deputy Rob Tackett found Elliott passed out behind the wheel of a Nissan Pathfinder in the southbound lane of Route 11. Tackett requested that Elliott take a Breathalyzer test, but she refused. Tackett then charged her with driving under the influence and refusal to take a Breathalyzer.

Thursday morning Goad's Body Shop, which is across the street from Berky's restaurant, reported two cars missing to the police. Elliott, who was already in custody, confessed that she and Fortener had taken the vehicles. Later that day, Fortener went to the Lexington Sheriff's office voluntarily and confessed.

Phi Executive Editor Hollister Hovey and News Editor Polly Doig checked the police docket on Sunday, Oct. 11. After speaking to Officer Tackett, Hovey and Doig attempted to contact both Elliott and Fortener for an article about the car theft, which was to be published in that Monday's edition of the Phi.

Despite repeated messages left with roommates and on voicemail, Elliott and Fortener never returned phone calls.

The Phi staff finished the newspaper at 3 a.m. The article, "Two students charged with vehicle theft," was the week's top story.

At about 3:30 a.m. Monday, Hovey received a threatening call at home. The caller did not identify herself.

Monday afternoon, The News-Gazette delivered 2,000 copies of the Phi to the University Center for distribution.

When Grant, Hovey and Doig arrived in the University Center around 4 p.m. to distribute the newspaper, approximately 1,500 copies of the paper were missing. Hovey and Doig headed toward Gaines to find Elliott and Fortener.

When Hovey asked for the missing papers, Elliott responded that the paper is free, and there was no reason why they couldn't take home multiple copies.

Hovey told the women that they could return the papers or pay for the cost of the reprint. Elliott returned approximately 50 copies she had in her backpack.

Despite rumors that more than one person was involved, Young denies that Elliott and Fortener were aided by others.

"[Elliott and Fortener] did not indicate that anyone else had helped them [with the newspaper theft]," Young said. "It seemed to stand to reason that they'd been accused of stealing the cars, and the headline in the paper was involving that story. They looked like the only suspects we had."

After the initial confrontation with Elliott and Fortener, Hovey left a message with Young, and Doig spoke with Dean of Students David Howison, who both promised action. Monday evening, Young and W&L security conducted a search for the missing newspapers.

Tuesday morning, Young found a car illegally parked with 25 copies of the Phi in it. Young towed the car and demanded that it not be released until the owners were questioned.

"We impounded the car," said Young. "It was improperly parked. It had the evidence of possible theft."

Elliott and Fortener told Young that they had dumped the newspapers in the dumpster behind Frank's Restaurant. Young subsequently drove them to the dumpster to retrieve the copies, but the trash had already been picked-up.

In the meantime, the Phi decided to reprint an additional 1,000 copies of the Monday edition, an additional cost of $360. The reprints were distributed Tuesday afternoon.

"The administration has always believed, at least in the eight years since I've been here, if our students commit a crime, then they should be held responsible," Young said. "They have a responsibility to the community of Washington and Lee and to the community of Lexington and Rockbridge County as a whole. The administration, while we find it unfortunate incident, doesn't want to hinder any prosecutions."

ALCOHOL

In addition, the annual Controlled Drinking Experiment was held Thursday evening in the GHQ Bistro.

According to director of W&L health services Dr. Jane Horton, the goals of the controlled drinking experiment are simple. "Participants drink in a controlled setting," said Horton. "We do field sobriety tests, measuring their blood alcohol content (BAC), and responses to alcohol over time, and show differences in how quickly someone's BAC rises depending on gender, body weight, eating, etc."

The results were posted and discussed throughout the event, and entertainment was also provided. According to Horton, participants were teamed with a non-drinking partner, at least 21 years old, weren't allowed to continue drinking once their BAC reaches .12 (the level where dysphoria and major motor skill impairment can begin), and were allowed to stop drinking at any time they felt they should.

A "pour a drink" contest was also held, in order to "demonstrate that mixed drinks often have more alcohol than one standard drink," Horton said.

Awareness seems to be increasing on many levels of campus life. This year, two W&L freshman halls are completely substance-free. This means that there is no alcohol, cigarette or drug use within any of the rooms on the halls. The idea was so popular when it was offered, that more people signed up than there was room for.

College binge drinking first came to the national forefront as an issue in 1993, when Harvard University released a survey citing shockingly high numbers of binge drinkers. Using a standard definition of five or more drinks in a night, Harvard found that percentages were particularly high (more than 80 percent) among members of Greek organizations.

Since then, national awareness has further been raised by the high-profile deaths of several college students. Harvard recently came out with another survey in September, reporting that binge drinking levels had increased in the four years since their last study.

And just last week, University of Michigan freshman Courtney Cantor died in a fall from her sixth-floor dorm room window after attending a fraternity party.

Although the investigation is ongoing, officials said alcohol was involved.

An estimated 50 college students die annually because of binge drinking, while hundreds of others suffer alcohol poisonings.

"We as a community are responsible for actions on our campuses," Shalala said.

ends June 15, weeks after Washington and Lee University's academic year ends. According to Novack, this is due to the fact that the program directors had to blend three different academic calendars—W&L's, Mary Baldwin's and AUBG's. W&L administrators decided to allow this unusual situation because it is a one-time program and they felt that it was a unique and important opportunity for its students, according to Novack.

Novack got the idea for the program from his wife, who teaches at Mary Baldwin College. She taught a course in Europe on the psychology of women three years ago and related to her husband what a wonderful experience it was to teach students of incredibly different backgrounds in the same classroom.

Novack also admired the relationships his wife was able to develop with students when they lived, ate and traveled together. "There's a sense of closeness you can't otherwise get," Novack said.

Geology Professor Ed Spencer, Philosophy Professor Harrison Pemberton and Classics Professor Herman Taylor will teach an interdepartmental course in Greece. Students will be required to take a class called Cultural History and Natural Philosophy of Greece and then select one of the following three classes: Greek Art and Architecture, Plato or Regional Geology of Greece and the Greek Islands. The first two weeks of the program will be spent in Lexington and the last four in Greece.

Three foreign language courses will be taught abroad for the entire six weeks of Spring Term. A French professor, yet to be determined, will lead a supervised study program in Paris, France. Assistant Professors Françoise Fregnac-Clave and Ellen Mayock will teach in Madrid, Spain. Professor Roger Crockett will bring students to Germany. The study abroad program in Moscow, Russia, which would have been led by Assistant Professor Anna Brodsky, was canceled this week because of political and economic unrest in the country.

According to Kirk Follo, Instructor of German, there are more opportunities for students to study abroad this year than ever before. The administration recently hired two full time international education specialists, making it clear to the faculty that the University is interested in supporting education abroad, Follo said.

Follo encourages students who are interested in going abroad this year with a Washington and Lee spring term course to contact the relevant professor immediately.

"It's what spring term is supposed to be for—doing unusual kinds of things," Follo said.

Limited financial aid is available, but the forms must be completed by Nov. 2.

According to Follo, Sociology 406 is the only course for which the price has been set.

School spirits win at W&L

Maybe the fantastic 4th quarter of this Saturday's football game will do for Washington and Lee athletics what Sammy Sosa and Mark McGwire have done for baseball.

Well, probably not, because no one was there. By the time the winning field goal was kicked, everyone had already gone to sleep off their tailgate hangovers.

But who would you expect to stay? They don't allow alcohol in the stands of Wilson Field.

No matter how hard our athletes try, barely anyone on this campus seems to give a damn about supporting them — unless spirits are involved.

The showing at football games is decent, but only until halftime, when the tailgate buzz wears off. And while they're there, the crowds are less enthusiastic than the onlookers at a chess match.

It's really sad when most of our high schools were juggernauts of school spirit. Stadiums filled to the brim for basketball games, with bands, cheerleaders and heckling fans. Football fans might have been kind of tipsy, but at least they cared about the game and used their roudiness for some good badgering.

“ We hear so many people say how much they love W&L, but they don't really love the place — they love the parties. ”

We hear so many people say how much they love W&L, but they really don't love the place — they love the parties.

If they really cared about what

W&L was about, they would try to make every aspect of this school great, including the turnout at sporting events.

We may be smart, but we're doing nothing to help our cause any by showing such pathetic, shallow support of our school. If we had any real pride in what this university really should stand for, it would be a better place.

Really, if we had more spirit, we would have more fun. We love the parties because so many of us have passion for alcohol. Sporting events could be just as fun if we had a fraction of the same passion, and showed it.

Don't tell us that they just aren't entertaining. We know you love sports, you just don't seem to like them when your friends and colleagues are playing.

Try to stop letting your spirits overshadow the spirit that should matter.

Parents boogie down with the kiddies

Why was Lexington infested with some of the world's most giddy, excited people this past weekend? I looked around and saw these few thousand smiling parents, and I wondered what could Washington and Lee's Parents Weekend possibly do to put these parents in such a marvelous mood. I came up with a few different reasons why our parents might love this place so much.

Looking at my father, I might assume that everyone's parents are weather fans. But I guess cool, crisp weather does not float everyone's pirogue like it does a man's from the sweltering Big Easy. So while gorgeous weather might have influenced the happy moods of our parents this weekend, I think a more profound reason effected the general good nature.

Now, some of the parents may have decided to let the spirits move them through till Sunday. Remembering that weekend senior year in high school when their little darling depleted the stock in the family liquor cabinet, maw and paw may have decided that this weekend was payback time. While I admit maybe a few parents may have enjoyed a bit too much company from Jack and José, I think something else may have caused those goofy grins.

Quite possibly, our parents see our college culture as something totally bizarre and inconsistent with their own lifestyles, and, therefore, they appreciate the fact that they no longer have to put up with us. If my room at home had looked (or smelled) in any way similar to my room here at school, my mother would have given me an atomic wedgie followed by a swift kick to the backside that would "knock you into last week" (one of her favorite lines). This weekend, however, she laughed and rolled her eyes. She didn't pull my underwear over my head and I'm still progressing on the timeline.

Saturday evening, however, I realized why these people looked like they had been breathing helium since September.

I can't really explain it, but maybe an example will shed some light on the matter. As I looked across a hot, loud fraternity basement, I saw parents enjoying themselves just as much as their children. What struck me most were the faces of these parents. Daddies, no specific names, let's just call them all Bob, busted a move with their little girls, grinning from ear to ear. At that moment they wanted to be on that sweaty floor more than anywhere else (and I promise it was not to show off their dynamic dance moves).

The bottom line is that they like us, they really like us. We don't understand why they get so excited about any little thing that we do and blow it all out of proportion. When I was nine, I had a hamster, Pee-Wee. If I put him in the bottom drawer of my chest, he would "magically" peek his little head out the top drawer 30 seconds later. I called all my friends over and showed them. They were not quite so amused, but I was still proud.

I think all of us blessed enough to have our parents visit this weekend need to let them know how much we appreciated their visit.

Virginia Tech student disagrees with printing of Phi article

Dear Phi,

I recently accessed your article about two students charged with vehicle theft via the internet. I have visited Washington and Lee functions numerous times and find it a shame that such an article would be published.

I attend Virginia Tech and while students may be arrested there has never been such an embarrassing article, like yours, published in our school newspaper. At Tech many fraternity members have recently been charged with embarrassing subject matter. While the public news has made this issue "very public" our school has been very sympathetic to the issue.

I thought Washington and Lee was founded on honor and pride. When I attended homecoming and "FD" everyone was very friendly. I would never have suspected that you would treat fellow students with such a lack of respect.

This article proves that the secluded, little school in the town of Lexington is nothing but a snobby, backstabbing, selfish waste. Is everyone there so worried about being the best that they would publish such an article just to make themselves feel better? Yes, this

Cross country captain claims unfair coverage in Phi

Dear Phi Editors,

It concerns me that you have yet to print anything this year about the cross country teams. Although it must have slipped your notice, Washington and Lee has a men's and a women's cross country team, both of which are nearing the ends of their seasons. Our state meet, where the women's team placed third, was two weeks ago. The Ring-tum Phi did not so much as mention it, despite the fact that sophomore Wendy Case placed sixth in the state individually. I find it bizarre that a school newspaper did not include this success story. The dedicated athletes on this team devoted much time and effort to their sport, and they deserve (even a little) recognition for their well-earned accomplishments. Three meets remain in our season: the Gettysburg Invitational, ODACS and the Regional Meet. I hope you will use these three final opportunities to report on a successful team and to give my teammates the recognition they deserve.

Sincerely,
Ashley Smith
Co-Captain, Women's XC Team

is the media, but I would hope that there are better things going on in Lexington so you could have spared these girls such embarrassment.

I'm sorry, but you all really need to think before you publish such life-damaging rubbish. I will think twice before visiting your institution again; I'd rather visit jail. I could not imagine being those two girls, let alone being you knowing that I helped to ruin their lives.

Sincerely,
Rebecca Falk

P.S. Do you not think these girls are not sorry for what they did? How do you think their family feels? What would your family do? Have you ever made a mistake? Are you perfect?

Everyone has messed up... maybe to a lesser degree, but that is regardless of the point. Have a good day and thank you for your time. I look forward to reading your paper, and hope that next time it will spread happy news, instead of destroying news.

American Cancer Society thanks W&L students

Dear Editors,

On behalf of the Rockbridge Community Unit of the American Cancer Society, I wish to express my thanks for the 100 students who participated in the tenth annual Making Strides Against Cancer walk-a-long. We collected over $1200, and over 30 prizes from local merchants were given away. In addition, Erin Kraal's hall won the "Sweet Taste of Victory Contest," earning a free lunch with Dean Dalhouse at Wilson Walker. Chi Omega edged out PIKA for the $100 IFC Award, which they donated to the ACS. PIKA, for the fourth year in a row, won the free pizzas courtesy of Frank's Pizza. Susan Smith's puppy, Annabelle, was the overwhelming winner of the Favorite Dog Contest, garnering over 55 votes of the 225 votes cast in the week prior to last Sunday's event.

Thanks to all who contributed to the efforts to wipe out cancer in our lifetime, especially the members of Chi Omega and the Catholic Campus Ministry, co-sponsors of the event.

Sincerely,
W.C. "Burr" Datz '75

Some Washington and Lee students vow to love, honor each other 'til death do they part

You might not realize it, but engaged and married couples are here on the Washington and Lee University campus. They are not just faculty members, however, because some W&L students are going to the chapel and they're gonna get married. Others have already made the trip down the aisle.

Some might say that these students are the unlucky ones. Why would any college student want to be tied down to only one person during a time in life when he or she should be having as much fun and dating as many people as possible?

Most engaged and married students, however, believe that they are actually the lucky ones. They are happy that they have found their true loves early in life.

"I knew I had found the right girl, and it felt like the right time to propose," senior Seth Kellerman, who is married to Hollins University senior Tara Ferguson, said.

"Being married is great, and I'm actually enjoying life a lot more now than I have in previous years," he said. "I am very content and happy with my situation."

Kellerman and Ferguson met at their high school and have been dating since their junior year. When they chose to attend different colleges, they had to commute between Lexington and Roanoke to see each other.

"It took a good amount of driving to be able to see her all the time," said Kellerman, "but it was worth it."

Kellerman wanted a romantic setting for his proposal, so he popped the big question on top of a mountain in California. The couple married on August 8 of this year and now live in Roanoke.

Junior Holly Estes and senior Cliff Woolley met two years ago when both were taking a class in the W&L theater department.

"We knew early on that we would be together forever," Estes said. "It was inevitable that we would get engaged, and then it just happened last year on our one year anniversary."

One of the most obvious advantages to being engaged or married is not having to search for dates to all the W&L date functions each year.

Estes believes that this advantage, however, is actually quite small compared to the other benefits that accompany engagement.

"The least of it is not always having to struggle to find dates," she said. "It is so much more than that, like always having someone you can count on to be there for you when you need them."

Despite the presence of engaged and married students at W&L, the majority of the student body is single. This definitely makes couples like these unique, but they don't seem to feel uncomfortable being in the minority.

"It's only strange when my girlfriends are looking for dates for functions because I don't feel that need anymore," Estes said. "I remember what that was like though. I also don't know that many undergraduate guys anymore because I don't feel that pressure to go to the frat houses and meet guys anymore."

These couples also have different, if not more, responsibilities than single students because they must always consider their partner's needs.

"I no longer plan just for myself," Kellerman said. "I have to think for my wife as well and about what's best for the both of us."

Engagement and marriage have also impacted these students' plans for life after graduation.

"I am going to go to grad school after I leave W&L, and I know that wherever I go, my fiancé will come with me," Estes said. "We want to get married before I go so that we will already be settled."

One thing that is for sure, these students are extremely satisfied with their lives, and they hope that other students will one day find the same happiness in love.

"It's great," said Kellerman. "I encourage everyone to go for it eventually!"

Lex's best love locales

by Erica Prosser

When you're trapped in Lexington or Rockbridge County, where can you go to inspire romance? No matter your budget, time constraints or transportation situation, romantic spots are out there waiting to beckon you and someone else closer.

Senior Rebecca Fitzsimmons had some quiet, outdoor ideas for enhancing romance. "I would drive up on the Blue Ridge Parkway to see the scenery and walk in the forest," she said. "It's also nice to walk on campus when no one's around, late in the day."

Junior Leah Schaefer echoed those sentiments. "It's nice to walk on the front campus when it's getting dark, along that path in front of Lee Chapel," she said.

Junior Meredith Welch preferred the thought of an outdoors experience farther from the Colonnade. "The best spot is the top of Devil's Marleyard, looking out over Arnold Valley," she said. Lovers beware, though; the trip to the top is a strenuous hike. The Lexington Visitor Center has directions and information for the intrepid. For the more relaxed lover, these remaining sunny days can also be enjoyed with picnics, bicycle trips and journeys out to Goshen Pass.

Junior Lance Clack suggested a very specific romantic spot in the "wilds" of W&L campus property.

"Down along the Woods Creek footbridge, there's a gravel path," he said. "Right there, when the grass hasn't been mowed and the moonlight is shining down through the trees, is the best place." He said that deer will sometimes wander down to the water to drink, adding to the magic of the scene. "It's more than a location," he said. "It's also timing."

Want a suggestion that doesn't involve so much outdoor activity? Restaurants are a familiar romantic destination, and in this area, bed and breakfasts also appear as popular spots. Susie Price, a Lexington resident, favors a combination of both. "If I were trying to stir up a romantic evening," she said, "I'd go to Maple Hall."

Local resident Ernestine [sic] Hockaday agreed. "I like Maple Hall or the Inn at Union Run," she said. "They're both bed and breakfasts, so one thing could lead to another."

The key to romance in Lexington is to use your imagination. It really is the thought that counts, so be creative! Love is worth it.

Campus husbands, wives make time for romance at W&L

by Elianna Marziani
STAFF WRITER

True romance: moonlight walks, stargazing, candlelight dinners, soft music, roses ... and lunch at the Co-op?

Romance comes in many forms, as Tyler and Beverly Lorig and other Washington and Lee University staff and faculty husband-and-wife couples have discovered.

Tyler Lorig is a professor of psychology. Beverly Lorig is the director of Career Development and Placement. After more than 20 years of marriage and nine years of working together at W&L, they have learned to appreciate everyday romance, looking on something as simple as lunch together at the Co-op as "a nice treat."

The Lorigs were married 21 years ago. Before coming to Washington and Lee, they both worked at Yale University. When Prof. Lorig was offered a job here 11 years ago, he moved to Lexington to work as a psychology professor while Mrs. Lorig stayed behind another year as assistant director of careers at Yale. After completing that year, she moved to Virginia and began doing gift work in the development office at Roanoke College.

"It was wonderful, to move back together as a family again," she said.

A year after moving to Lexington, Mrs. Lorig began working as the director of the Career Development and Placement Office at W&L, where she has remained for the past nine years.

"W&L has a good reputation. I wanted to stay at a well-respected school, one with high quality students," she said.

Prof. Lorig is currently on sabbatical at the Monell Institute in Philadelphia, researching olfaction and brain activity, and Mrs. Lorig is here advising students for majors, career courses and post-graduation plans.

One might wonder what it must be like to work on the same campus with a spouse, always seeing each other at work. Mrs. Lorig says that, in fact, when Prof. Lorig is here, she rarely sees him at work.

"I could be working in Roanoke or somewhere else and it wouldn't have been much different," she said. "We focus on our work during the day and catch up in the evening."

The de Marias are another example of a successful campus couple. Robert de Maria is a professor of journalism and mass communications, and his wife Lynda is a departmental secretary for the C-School. The de Marias have been married for only four years. Prof. de Maria is beginning his 22nd year at the University, while Mrs. de Maria has been working at W&L for four years.

The couple met when Mrs. de Maria was working in Charlottesville at the University of Virginia.

"A former student introduced us," Prof. de Maria explained.

Mrs. de Maria started working at W&L as a temporary worker to fill in for a woman who was having health problems. When it became evident that the woman was unable to return, Mrs. de Maria began her permanent work at W&L.

The de Marias enjoy working on the same campus. "I think it has its ups and downs. We get to see each other more frequently, and being newlyweds, that's important," Mrs. de Maria explained.

Her only complaint? She has to work all but two weeks of the summer, while her husband is under no such obligation.

The de Marias take care to keep the romance alive despite the workplace environment, though. Like the Lorigs, they are very busy people who generally try, but fail, to meet for lunch.

"But we e-mail," Mrs. de Maria added.

Prof. de Maria definitely enjoys the closeness they feel as a result of working on the same campus.

"We come in together, most of the time go home together, and if I need her in any way, shape, or form, I don't need to go across God's green acre to find her," he said.

Sweet as that sentiment is, both the Lorigs and the de Marias admit that working on campus with a spouse is not always a bed of roses.

Mrs. Lorig said that her pet peeve is that people somehow expect her to have some link to her husband that lets her know where he is and what he is doing at all times.

"I don't keep up with him," she said.

The de Marias face a similar problem.

"I don't know how many times that Lynda has had to transfer a call for me," Prof. de Maria said.

One colleague who often called Mrs. de Maria's phone number and had her transfer him to Prof. de Maria's line was under the mistaken impression that she was the professor's secretary. Sometimes, people dial the spouse's number unintentionally.

"I've tried to keep my maiden name [in phone listings] for that reason, but it doesn't always help," said Mrs. de Maria.

Although some minor confusions occur, neither couple has any strong complaints about working together on campus. Both couples strive to keep their work independent of their relationship and respect each other's professional privacy.

"[Students'] work with me is done in confidentiality," Mrs. Lorig said. "Although they might despise [Prof. Lorig], their conversations with me are held in the strictest confidence. That information is never shared, and they can be completely honest, even if it related to my spouse who is making their lives miserable."

The de Marias agree that this privacy is vital. "We both hold our privacy issues very dear. I have no business to know," Mrs. de Maria stated.

For issues not needing confidentiality, however, having a spouse on campus can actually be a great help at work.

"When I'm frustrated with how to get faculty support for something, [Prof. Lorig] is a good person to run ideas across," Mrs. Lorig offered. "We often have a very colorful discussion about career options for students."

The Lorigs' jobs occasionally serve to complement each other, and each learns from the other.

Both couples enjoy working on campus together and were hard pressed to come up with any negative aspects of working on the same campus.

"There is none. No, it's the truth!" Prof. de Maria insisted.

The number of campus couples makes one wonder if personnel purposefully seeks couples to work on campus. Seeing how well the couples seem to work together, perhaps the idea is not totally implausible.

Then again, it could just be a result of the size of Lexington.

"W&L is one of the larger employers here. It's a challenge for a two-career couple, a professional couple, to come to a town like this," Mrs. Lorig said, offering the idea that perhaps couples end up working for W&L in part because they have similar interests and few other employers through which to pursue those interests.

Whether "couples on campus" is a plot created by romantics in the personnel office or merely coincidence, one thing is certain: couples on campus are going strong and promising to stick around for a while.

True love in Lexington

by Ken Jackman
STAFF WRITER

Once upon a time, President John Elrod and his wife, Mimi, met on July 4, 1962, when John was dating a friend of Mimi's sister and he was invited to her house. When Mimi and John saw each other, they were instantly attracted. From that day forth, John and Mimi knew they had something special. They began to date, and within only four months, they were engaged. Less than a year later they were married. Mimi transferred from a school in Florida to Oglethorpe University in Atlanta so that they would be together.

Now that the loving couple is living here at Washington and Lee University, they are very busy, but they enjoy the time that they are able to spend together. After a full day they often spend time cooking dinner and doing the dishes together. The Elrods say that simple tasks are that much more fun when done together by two people who love each other.

Sometimes, however, they need to get away from W&L to be together. In those cases, they schedule a time to go someplace where they can relax and enjoy each other's company—a weekend trip to the beach or the mountains, for example. They even enjoy car rides together when they can talk or listen to the radio. The Elrods simply love to spend time together.

Do fairy tales come true? It would seem so, because the Elrods are an enchanted couple making time in the 1990s to live happily ever after.

News from the d-hall:

Freshman wins pie-eating contest

How fast would you eat a pie for $25? That was the challenge posed to some very brave diners in the Evans Dining Hall at the Dining Service's annual Hoe Down on Oct. 14.

The event included live musical entertainment, clog dancers and lots of food. As part of the festivities, two women and nine men participated in a traditional pie-eating contest.

The challenge? Who could eat a specially prepared dessert in the shortest amount of time. The menu? Chocolate cream pies designed by kitchen staff to cause the most chaos per bite. Entrants were not allowed to use their hands. They sat side by side and began munching at once.

Josh Counts, a freshman, held all comers at bay as he chowed down his nine-inch pie in just under 23 seconds.

Eels' new album shocks popular music

by Matt Lamotte
MUSIC REVIEWER

The late 90s have brought about a revolution in popular music. The divisions between rock, pop, hip-hop, alternative and electronica have given way to a general interest in combining every instrument and every sound available in an effort to create textured fields of music that draw from almost every imaginable source. Few bands have succeeded at this compositional medium as well as Eels.

Eels scored a modern rock hit in 1996 with "Novacaine for the Soul," a trippy, catchy single with an even trippier video. All of the musical conventions from their earlier work appear on their second album, Electro-Shock Blues, a conventionally delicious pop masterpiece. Eels' trademark drum samples, sleepy guitar lines, whistful vocals and irreverent lyricism are now accompanied by a host of new unconventional touches.

The first single, "Last Stop: This Town," begins with what sounds like a pleasant toy keyboard melody and it is accompanied by lead singer E's breathy vocals.

As the song builds, electric guitars, samples, drums, background singers and eventually a record-scratching groove enter the mix. Instruments enter and exit randomly, almost anonymously, resulting in a patchwork of rhythm and melody that take the listener through musical colors and textures that fascinate and delight.

"My Descent Into Madness" incorporates sleigh bells with a jazzy bassline with an organ, before yielding entirely to E's voice accompanied by drums and a string section that brings to mind a holiday cocktail party, which is joined again by the familiar organ progression. On "Ant Farm," a country-tinged guitar part adds a pleasant touch of ease and comfort to E's otherwise saddening vocal and keyboard parts.

Sadness is a major theme of the album, most evidently in E's lyrics. In the last year, E has experienced the death of several family members, including his mother. Song titles like "Going to Your Funeral," "Cancer for the Cure," "The Medication is Wearing Off," accompanied by album artwork that includes a cartoon gravestone stating "Everything is Changing," reflect E's sense of loss and confusion.

The underlying concept to his words is not his sadness, however, but rather his reflections throughout his ongoing search for happiness. Even though the album begins with "waking up is so much harder / when you want to die," it doesn't linger in depression for long. When he sings on the title track, "take me in your warm embrace / I am trying . . .," you know he really is trying, and the general warmth of the music makes for a compelling moment.

By the last song on the album, "P.S. You Rock My World," E has come to a completely healthy and remarkable epiphany. "I was at a funeral the day I realized / I wanted to spend my life with you," he sings, before concluding the album with "maybe it's time to live."

Eels has been compared to Beck and Radiohead, but in truth, there isn't another band on the planet that comes close to their sound. Electro-Shock Blues is a modern masterpiece, and exemplifies a fantastic new direction of popular music.

W&L holds Writers Harvest for charity

For the fifth year, Washington and Lee will participate in Share our Strength's Writers Harvest, the nation's largest literary benefit to fight hunger and poverty.

On Thursday in Northern Auditorium at 7:30 p.m., assistant English professors Christopher Camuto and Lesley Wheeler, senior Beth Perry and sophomores Christine Metzger and Susan Slim will join more than 2,000 writers across the country in reading their poetry and prose. A donation of $10 is suggested.

R.T. Smith, editor of W&L's "Shenandoah," says of the Lexington event, "We have raised substantial funds in the past years to help out the hungry, but last year the turnout was disappointing. I hope people will join us this October."

For those who can't attend but would like to make a donation, please send checks made payable to Share Our Strength to Smith in care of "Shenandoah" at Washington and Lee.

Tobias Wolff, chair of Writers Harvest 1998 and author of "This Boy's Life," said, "Writers Harvest is an occasion to be alert, to be awake about what's going on around us. It is an occasion to celebrate the possibilities of art — to recognize that it can be a part of our moral atmosphere."

Professor Jeans publishes essay

Roger Jeans, the Elizabeth Lewis Otey Professor of East Asian History at Washington and Lee University, has published an essay in a new book titled "George C. Marshall's Mediation Mission to China: December 1945-January 1947." The book was published by the George C. Marshall Foundation.

Jeans' essay is titled "Last Chance for Peace: Zhang Junmai (Carsun Chang) and Third-Party Mediation in the Chinese Civil War, October 1946."

The book, a collection of 24 essays from authors in seven different countries, was edited by Larry I. Bland, editor of the Marshall Papers Project and managing editor of the "Journal of Military History," and also contains an essay by Mark F. Wilkinson, professor of American diplomatic and modern East Asian history at VMI.

Wind ensemble presents fall concert

The music department at Washington and Lee University will present its Fall Wind Ensemble concert on Nov. 3 at 8 p.m. in the Lenfest Center for the Performing Arts. Admission is free.

Under the baton of Barry H. Kolman, professor of music, the University Wind Ensemble will perform "Slava!" by Leonard Bernstein, "Variations on Est-ce Mars" by Sweelinck, and "March, Op. 99" by Prokofiev. The concert also features works by Woolfenden, Jacob, Jolo, Bourgeois and Cese.

Troubadour hosts Vampire Film Festival

The Washington and Lee Film Society will celebrate Halloween with a Vampire Film Festival, Oct. 29-31. Thursday features "Nosferatu" (Germany, 1922), directed by F.W. Murnau (silent version). On Friday, the featured film is "Cronos" (Mexico, 1992), directed by Guillermo del Toro, in Spanish with subtitles. The last film on Saturday is "The Addiction" (USA, 1995), directed by Abel Ferrara, in English.

Each showing will be at 7:30 p.m. in the Troubadour Cinema, at the corner of Main and Henry Streets. There is no charge for admission, although contributions are welcome. Viewers should be prepared for a few surprises in the theater.

Bicentinquagenary Bulletin

This year, Washington and Lee University's School of Law is celebrating its 150th anniversary.

The Law School's history is based in the Lexington Law School, which was established in 1849 by Judge John W. Brockenbrough. Annexed by the college in 1866, the Lexington Law School became Washington and Lee's "School of Law and Equity."

John Randolph Tucker, former Attorney General for the Commonwealth of Virginia, general counsel for the B&O Railroad, and later a United States Congressman, was appointed as the first Dean of the law school. The first building that separately housed the law school was completed in 1900 and was named in memoriam for Tucker.

After a fire that destroyed the first Tucker Hall in 1934 and an unprecedented increase in enrollment in the early 1970s, Lewis Hall was constructed in 1976 and dedicated in 1977 as the permanent home of the Washington and Lee University School of Law.

1999 Spring Term in Central Europe

Travel to Central Europe with Professor Novack and explore Prague, Krakow, Belgrade, Budapest, and Vienna. The focus of this study abroad course will be the relative deviance and normality of being Jewish in Central Europe from World War II to the present. Visit historic Jewish sites including Auschwitz, synagogues, and the famous Jewish cemetery in Prague. Arrangements will be made for students to meet with faculty and students at universities in the various cities on the itinerary, thus affording participants the opportunity to discuss both the historic and current status of Jewish identity in these culturally and geographically diverse areas. The primary study component will be at the American University of Bulgaria where Bulgarian students will participate fully in the class. The total cost is $1950.00 For further information, contact Professor Novack in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology.

Women's soccer clinches ODAC regular season title

by Frances Groberg
SPORTS EDITOR

This year, the women's soccer team has put it all together, accomplishing two of their primary goals this weekend.

First, the team captured its first regular season ODAC regular season title on Saturday by defeating the Randolph-Macon Yellow Jackets 2-1.

The victory sealed the second team goal, ensuring that Washington and Lee will host the ODAC tournament on Friday and Saturday.

Saturday will also be "senior day," in which the women's soccer program will honor senior tri-captains Elizabeth Richey, Nicole Johnson, and Karin Treese.

Sophomore Lindsay Williams, starting for the first time this season, put the Generals on top just 3:50 into the game. Three minutes later, however, the Yellow Jackets tied the game 1-1 with a successful corner kick.

Senior captain Karin Treese, W&L's all-time leading goalscorer, broke the tie with her final regular-season goal in the second half to put the Generals up 2-1.

"It was the first goal I've ever scored against Randolph-Macon," Treese said. "It's a great feeling to win, and a great feeling to host ODACs."

Sophomore goalie Lauren Harris posted eight key saves in the second half for W&L, when most of the action was on the Generals' side of the field.

"I'm really proud of the way the team played," Harris said. "We've started playing really well together lately, but we still have some aspects of our game to fix. We are still young, and a little nervous, as the last ten minutes of Saturday's game showed."

Thursday, the Generals coasted to an easy 10-0 victory over Emory and Henry. Treese posted a hat trick in the game, her third of the season. Junior forward Ginny Jernigan and sophomore midfielder Courtney Nolan each scored two goals in the contest.

Last Saturday, W&L routed the College of Notre Dame 7-0. Goals were posted by sophomore Margaret Hunter-Turner, Treese, Jernigan, and Williams. Harris and junior goalie Stephanie McKnight combined for the shutout, the sixth of the season.

On Wednesday of last week, the team handed Lynchburg College its first ODAC loss since 1996 by a score of 2-1. Both goals were scored by freshman Kate Bidwell.

The Generals will host Sweet Briar on Tuesday afternoon in the first round of the ODAC tournament. The game will be played at the Liberty Hall Fields starting at 3:00 p.m.

Volleyball spikes to victory

The Generals volleyball team tacked up one more win at the Warner Center this week by defeating Christopher Newport (15-3, 15-8, 15-10) on Thursday.

The win was the team's 11th straight victory since losing to Thomas Moore exactly one month ago, September 26.

Washington and Lee is now 20-2 overall going into the final two games of the regular season before the ODAC tournament. They remain ranked sixth in the region, on track for the NCAA tournament.

Once again, freshman Ricka Hildebrand led the offensive attack for the Generals with eight kills against Christopher Newport.

"We played really well as a team, and I think we're coming together well in time for the post season," Hildebrand said.

W&L was also led by their deep roster of veteran players. Junior Nancy Riendhart totaled six kills, three aces, and 14 digs in the match. Sophomore Pam Saulsbury led the setters with 10 assists and recorded 10 digs as well.

On October 17, W&L traveled to the Goucher Invitational and posted a 4-0 record to take the championship.

The Generals defeated Alvernia (15-6, 15-12, 15-10), Goucher (15-13, 15-13, 6-15, 15-12, and 15-12, 20-18, 15-4), and Seton Hill (15-3, 13-15, 15-11, 15-8). Freshman Lindsay Ruckert was named to the all-tournament team.

The Generals will travel to Eastern Mennonite on Tuesday afternoon, and will be back in the Warner Center against rival Roanoke College on Saturday at 12 noon. The match will be their final contest before the ODAC tournament.

Freshman saves day

Wiginton hits 42-yard field goal in 23-21 comeback

by Brendan Harrington
SPORTS EDITOR

It's never over till it's over.

Those words hit home on Saturday afternoon at Wilson Field as freshman Brad Wiginton's 42-yard field goal attempt split the uprights as time expired to give Washington and Lee a dramatic 23-21 come-from-behind victory over Sewanee.

The Generals scored 16 points in the final 4:41 to overcome a 21-7 fourth quarter deficit in what was one of the most exciting games in the history of Washington and Lee football.

"It was one of the most amazing games I've ever been apart of," said junior quarterback Christian Batcheller. "I don't think I'll ever forget it."

"It was a great win for us," Miriello said following the game. "It's big time medicine for a team that's been knocked around so far this year."

Sewanee jumped out to a 14-0 second quarter lead, but the Generals cut the lead to 14-7 with 2:31 left in the second quarter on a 11-yard touchdown pass from Batcheller to junior wide receiver J.T. Malatesta.

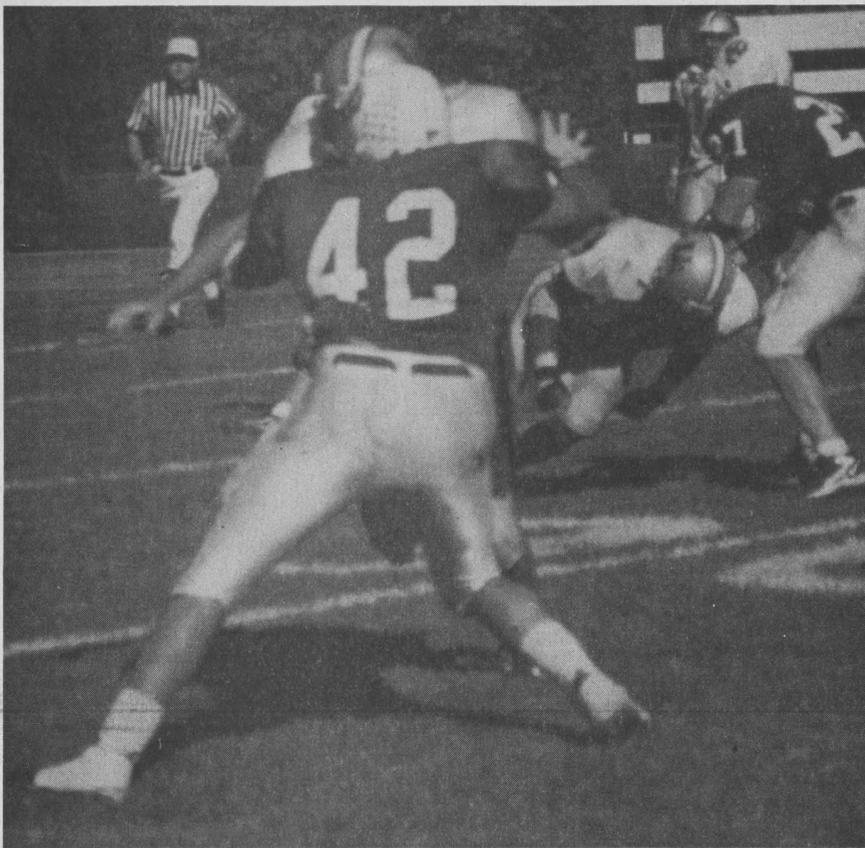

The Tigers went ahead 21-7 with 6:42 left in the third quarter on Brian Morrison's two-yard touchdown run, his second touchdown of the game.

With 5:18 left in the game and the Generals still trailing 21-7, Batcheller threw a 44-yard pass to senior wide receiver Chas Chastain on a 4th and 14 play which gave the Generals first and goal on the Sewanee one-yard line.

On the next play, junior fullback Scott Moses scored on a one-yard run to make the score 21-14 with 4:41 left to play.

The Generals defense then forced the Tigers to punt and W&L got the ball back with 2:48 remaining. The Generals then drove 70 yards in just 50 seconds as sophomore tailback Marc Watson ran it in from one yard out to make it 21-20 with 0:51 left.

In a controversial decision, Head Coach Frank Miriello decided to go for the two point conversion to try and get the win instead of kicking the extra-point and settling for overtime.

The two-point conversion failed, however, as Batcheller couldn't connect with Watson in the end zone and the Generals still trailed by one.

"The decision to go for two was made five minutes ahead of time," Miriello said. "Their offense can eat up 25 yards just like that and we didn't think we could stop them in overtime, so we didn't think twice about going for the win if we got the touchdown."

Just as it looked as though there was no hope, the Generals executed the on-sides kick to perfection and sophomore Tom Monaco recovered placekicker Andy Vendig's perfectly struck ball on the W&L 48-yard line.

"Andy practices that all the time and he executed it to perfection," Miriello said.

The Generals then drove down to the Sewanee 34-yard line, where Batcheller connected with tight end Scott Humphreys on a crucial 4th and 5 play, giving the Generals a first down at the 25 yard-line with 11 seconds remaining.

Instead of spiking the ball, the Generals rushed their field goal unit onto the field, and Wiginton nailed the 42-yarder as time expired. It was his first collegiate field goal attempt.

Wiginton has kicked extra points all season long for W&L, but just this week Miriello decided to make Wiginton the man for field goals as well.

"It was the kind of opportunity you dream of," Wiginton said. "I mean, what more could you ask for?"

After the field goal split the uprights, the entire team piled on top of Wiginton, while Coach Miriello and his son T.D., who carries the cable for the headset, embraced on the sideline in an emotional moment.

"Our kids never, ever quit," Miriello said. "I told the guys before the game that when you have two 1-5 teams it comes down to who can handle adversity the best. Things started out rough, but we kept adjusting and we didn't let it get to us."

"After not living up to expectations so far this year, a lot of people expect us to just quit, but we don't," Batcheller said. "This was a huge win for our confidence."

The Tigers finished with 375 yards rushing for the game but had only eight yards passing.

Quarterback Max Fuller finished with 198 yards rushing on 24 carries to lead the Tigers. Watson had another solid game for the Generals with 20 carries for 84 yards and a touchdown. Batcheller was 17-37 for 219 yards with one touchdown and one interception.

"Now we have something to shoot for," Batcheller said. "If we win our last three we can end the season with a .500 record."

Soccer unbeaten in last nine

by Tod Williams
STAFF WRITER

On Saturday, the men's soccer team hosted Randolph-Macon as their Parents' Weekend opponent. The Generals shut out the Yellow Jackets, winning their last home game of the regular season.

Washington and Lee, who is 8-0-1 in their last nine games, broke the W&L record for most consecutive games without a loss on Saturday with their 1-0 win over RMC.

The team has only lost two games this year, to Virginia Wesleyan and Eastern Mennonite. Both games were back in September.

This is the third season in a row W&L's win column has been in double digits, the most times in school history.

"We're not looking too far forward. We have two huge games in front of us."

—Jamie Parker

With the victory, the Generals clenched a home berth for at least the first round of post-season ODAC playoffs.

W&L keeper E. J. Murphy had five saves in Saturday's game off nine RMC shots. Murphy has allowed seven goals this season, and has notched seven shutouts this year, six of which have come in the last seven games.

The only goal in the game came from junior midfielder Jamie Parker, his ninth on the year. His goal, at 65:59, was the third in a series of General shots after a penalty kick. Yellow Jacket goalkeeper Michael Matson saved the first two attempts.

After scoring half of the Generals' goals for the week, Parker said he was "happy things were finally coming together" for him this year.

Tuesday afternoon the Generals shut out Ferrum College 3-0 at the Liberty Hall Fields in their second-to-last regular season home game of the year.

Despite a scoreless first half, three different Generals pulled it together to record goals.

Junior midfielder Scott LeTourneau scored first, just 31 seconds into the second.

Parker quickly followed suit, scoring his eighth goal of the season at 54:34.

Sophomore midfielder Scott Lofranco scored his fourth goal of the season in the game off a header from freshman Paul Wallace's corner kick to boost the Generals to the victory.

Although the Generals could now be riding high after nine games without a loss, Parker said the team's main goal is staying focused for the last of the regular season games.

"We're not looking too far forward," he said. "We've still got two huge games ahead of us."

The Generals, who now stand at 10-2-2, will travel to Roanoke on Wednesday for a 4:00 p.m. contest. The 13-2-1 Maroons are ranked seventh nationally in Division III play.

$520 billion national budget explained

by Kevin McManemin
MY BOLOGNA HAS A FIRST NAME

Those of you who keep up with the news (i.e. a couple of journalism professors) probably know that Congress just passed a massive $520 billion budget filled with more pork than Rush Limbaugh's pantry. The bill spanned 3,825 pages, making it almost half as long as "War and Peace."

It weighed about 40 pounds. Really — it said that in The Washington Post. No, I don't know why anyone would want to weigh the federal budget either (sorry guys, I don't have the budget's other measurements, though inside sources swear it's at least a D-cup).

The point is that it's really friggin' big and no Congressman has read the entire thing (the Mississippi representatives haven't even gotten through the first paragraph). Yes sir, it's good economic times in the U.S. of A and the cash is being passed around like a bong at a Pink Floyd concert.

WHERE THE MONEY'S GOING

- $4 billion to solve the Social Security crisis by shipping everyone over 65 to Indonesia

- $56,000 for presidential cigars
- $2 billion aid package to Russia to keep capitalism from failing
- $3 billion for nukes for when Russian capitalism inevitably fails
- $1.2 million for a new solar-powered, energy-efficient Al Gore
- $920 million to the Ken Starr "Let's drag out this painful spectacle as long as we possibly can" fund
- $1.3 million for new software after a mysterious virus wiped out all justice department hard drives during the Microsoft trial
- $3 million for the research, development and testing of a new, hyper-sappy catch phrase/cliché candidates can run into the ground in the upcoming elections
- $45 billion so that NASA can continue our important national endeavor of shooting nerds into space
- $4 billion to hire new teachers to fill that fortified trench line we call the public education system

WHERE THE MONEY CAME FROM

Well, when a mommy dollar and a daddy dollar fall in love...

WHERE THE MONEY REALLY CAME FROM

The government receives its revenue from a wide number of sources including you, me and the rest of the middle class. The rich have accountants who are able to find wonderful loopholes like getting agricultural subsidies for their yachts if they plan to go fishing on them. Rich people actually make money by paying taxes.

Until the middle class' hard-earned money can be redistributed among the poor and rich, the government puts the money in the bank. Last year, the United States government opened up a savings account at Citibank. The government got a competitive 5.6 percent compounded quarterly interest rate on the national treasury and a checking account with a free checkbook in their choice of the plain blue, spring flowers or world landmarks design. The government also refinanced the mortgage on Alaska and got a free toaster as part of Citibank's guaranteed service.

THE NATIONAL DEBT

In the past quarter century the United States has seen its national debt balloon like a freshman girl's thighs after two months of the D-hall. The national debt is all due to one singular historical development: the credit card.

Throughout the 80s and 90s, the government simply charged everything. "Is there a war with Iraq? We'll charge it. Welfare mothers can't afford crack on their own? Here, just put it on our Visa."

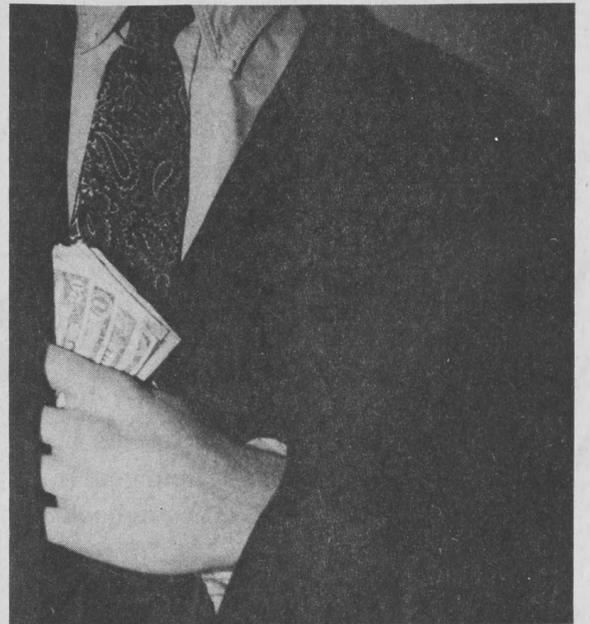

The "buy now, pay later" mentality fostered by credit cards worked just fine for America; until of course that fateful day when "now" became "later." Suddenly, like so many college students who spent the whole term charging beer, beer and beer to their cards, the government got a bill it couldn't possibly pay and shit its collective pants.

Currently, the nation has advanced beyond the "concerned" stage of debt and into the "complete and utter apathy" stage. The debt is now so staggeringly large we know we'll never pay it off, so we've stopped caring.

Adding to the apathy is the fact that this whole thing doesn't make much sense to most non-economics majors (or the clinical term, "cool people"). Really, how can a nation even be in debt, who the hell had a couple trillion dollars lying around to lend us, and do they honestly expect us to pay it back?

HOW THE BUDGET WILL AFFECT YOU

The funny thing about our country passing laws not even the lawmakers have read is that no one is really sure what they'll do. However, based on the general theory that modern politics is of minimal importance to everyone except politicians' lives, I wouldn't lose any sleep over it.

Supreme Court contract negotiations heat up

Washington, D.C. — Justice Antonin Scalia will become a free agent effective November if the Supreme Court doesn't exercise its option to re-sign him for the 1998-99 season. Scalia, the league leader in "guilty" verdicts, has demanded a salary of $10 million a year, well over the salary cap listed in the Constitution as "eleven pence and a half-shilling per fortnight."

The Court is apprehensive about losing another veteran justice so soon after trading Ruth Bader Ginsberg and David Souter to Great Britain in return for a Chief Magistrate and two lower court judges to be named later.

If Scalia does not re-sign with the Supreme Court, it is expected that he'll retain amateur judicial status so he can compete in the 2002 Olympics.

Loser to be made cool by "South Park" merchandise

Indianapolis, IN — Local loser Terrence Phelps, 16, announced plans to buy a "South Park" t-shirt in a press conference held earlier today. "The show 'South Park' is really edgy and cool. Wearing a 'South Park' t-shirt will make me edgy and cool as well," Phelps explained.

His classmates at Grover Cleveland High School, 195 of whom already own "South Park" t-shirts, were stunned by the announcement. "Wow, I always thought Terrence was, like, a total tool," Amanda Gilmour said, "but if he's the kind of free-thinking rebel who would watch such a hip, subversive show and then buy a mass marketed t-shirt to let everyone else know he watches the show, like, I mean, how cool!"

Phelps has not yet decided whether he will buy the "Beefcake, BEEFCAKE" Cartman shirt or the "Oh my God, you killed Kenny! You bastards!" shirt. "I'm currently leaning towards the Kenny t-shirt as wearing a mild profanity to class will make me even cooler," Phelps said.

El Niño blamed for failure of "The Magic Hour"

Los Angeles, CA — Fox network executives are blaming the weather phenomenon known as El Niño for the failure of their short-lived, ill-conceived summer talk travesty "The Magic Hour."

"High pressure cold fronts in the South Pacific caused the light-headedness of our programmers and clouded their reasoning, allowing them to think that a man like Magic Johnson, so utterly devoid of media savvy or the slightest hint of comic talent, would be successful in hosting his own Carson-rip-off talk show," Fox head Rupert Murdoch said.

Fox execs claim that El Niño also affected the comicsphere, a layer of the atmosphere through which television comedy is transmitted. "El Niño's storms managed to block the transmission of Magic's biting wit, his suave charm and his subtle satiric nuances," Murdoch said. "Unfortunately, the uncomfortable interviews, the dim-witted sketches and the embarrassing monologues were transmitted just fine."

Inside sources say producers are regretting not trying their original NBA talk show ideas, such as "The Vlade Divac Show," "The Gheorghe Muresan Hour" and "Late Night with Mookie Blaylock."

"Urban Legend" gets ax

by Brian Prisco
PHI MOVIE GUY

1 2 3 4 5

(WAIT UNTIL IT COMES OUT ON HBO)

I love horror movies. A bunch of nubile teenagers running around having sex and drinking beer only to be slaughtered by some hatchet-wielding maniac dressed up like a lumberjack or plumber. Who doesn't love that? However, "Urban Legend," the Hollywood machine's latest attempt at the formulaic Neo-Horror movement, falls flat on its face and starts digging.

Now, the current trend in horror movies is fresh and provocative. It follows what I call the "Scream" formula, created by Kevin Williamson (who also wrote this movie). The cast, a bunch of attractive teenagers, are assaulted by the killer, a faceless entity who wears an outfit that everyone in town possesses (i.e. a Halloween mask, a fisherman's raincoat). The killer turns out to be after only one of the cast members, usually because they did something terrible involving the death of a loved one. Simple enough, right? Not for this one, kiddies.

The plot is... well, okay. Horror movies don't really NEED a plot. Someone gets killed, everyone gets sad, they drink a bunch of beer and have sex, someone gets killed again. Lather rinse repeat; blah blah blah. This movie hinges its story on urban legends: modern folklore stories that are supposed to be true and everyone has heard before (the baby-sitter who puts the baby in the oven, the killer who hides in the back seat of the car, if you rub President Elrod's head you'll get three wishes, etc.).

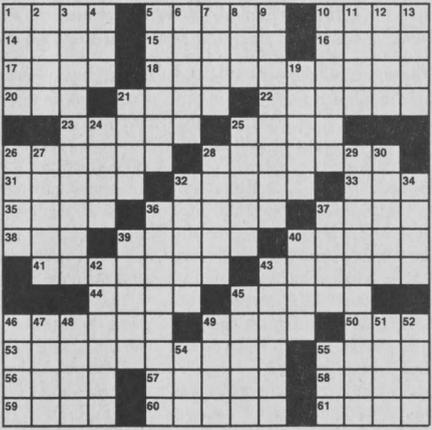

The killer in this movie runs around killing people à la urban folklore. He hides in the back seat of one girl's car with an ax and when she finally turns around, swish swish she's minus a head. Nice twist, and the legends chosen are well-known and appropriate to the story. So the plot is virtually an urban legend himself. They might want to give the man more than 15 minutes screen time. Key to movie making: if you have brilliant professionals, USE THEM.

So we've got a half-assed story being acted out by people no one knows. I think in realizing this, the filmmakers sort of got bored and tried to put the story out of its misery with the hideous ending. It's contrived, it's asinine, it's boring — let's not mince words, it fing blows. Let's end a pitiful attempt at a horror movie with an even worse ending that will leave the audience crying... for their money back.

Perhaps most confusing of all, this movie is just not scary. I'm a chickenshit when it comes to horror movies — I cover my eyes, I look away, and I jump four feet in the air. But this movie just doesn't scare you. The killer isn't frightening and they might as well just write a telegraphed message across the bottom of the screen letting you know when people are jumping out.

Don't waste time or money watching this flick. Go to the video store and rent "Halloween" or "Nightmare on Elm Street" if you want to be scared. Wait until "Scream 3," or "I Still Know What You Did Last Summer" comes out (which consequently I can't wait for because the trailer gave me a heart attack). This Urban Legend should be forgotten.
