A Visit with William Humphrey

Washington and Lee's Glasgow Professor
Talks About His Work and Plans for the Future;
His New Novel Was Completed During His
Two-Semester Residence at the University

By GENE HANSLEY
Assistant Director of Information Services

AN AMERICAN writer whose first novel received wide critical praise and was later made into a successful movie, has completed his second novel at Washington and Lee University.

William Humphrey, author of Home From the Hill, was Glasgow Visiting Professor the first semester of the current academic year and stayed on in Lexington the second semester "because we liked the place and I didn't want to interrupt my work right now."

Seated in the living room of "Rose Hill," a hilltop farmhouse just outside Lexington, where Humphrey and his wife have been living, he said when he arrived in September he had set for himself a deadline for completing the novel which had been in progress for several years.

"I'm a very slow, painstaking writer," he said, "and it does get very hard at times, so when I was coming near the end of the book, it was like looking down a tunnel where you can see a very faint glimmer."

While staying at Washington and Lee, the glimmer became a full light because he finished the book March 2, six weeks ahead of the deadline he had established for himself. "I suppose I wrote about 75 pages here which for me is a fantastic amount. I never wrote so fast," he said.

The book has been accepted for publication both in New York and London in January, 1965, and a long episode has been sold to the Saturday Evening Post for publication this fall.

Originally the book was titled "Look Away, Look Away," but just recently Humphrey's publishers discovered another book being released soon that has that title.

"This was a very great blow," he said, "and I've spent lots of time searching for another satisfactory one."

But students and faculty at Washington and Lee have already heard portions of the first novel he has written since Home From the Hill. He devoted all of the last of the four lectures he gave the first semester to reading part of the book to an enthralled audience.

Humphrey explained that as Glasgow Visiting Professor, his main duty "was those four lectures and even the subject of them was left entirely up to me."

In determining the subjects of the addresses, he said he "ruled out a series of interrelated lectures because you have to spend too much time repeating what you had said in previous talks in the series."

So he decided to do what he thought most people would do—"talk about the things that mean the most to you, the things you are thinking about."

His first lecture was "Ah, Wilderness" in which he discussed how novelists have "decried the advance of civilization on the wilderness." Humphrey revealed he "read 3,500 pages of James Fenimore Cooper to spend five minutes talking about him in that lecture."

The second lecture defined the conventions of telling a story by voice and writing down a story, "I suggested there's a small class of novelists still using the conventions of the spoken story in written form," Humphrey said.

Flaubert and Tolstoy as historical novelists were discussed in the third lecture and the fourth was given over to reading the long excerpt from the new novel completed while in residence at Washington and Lee.

Humphrey sat in on "about a half dozen meetings" of Dr. R. C. MacDonald's creative writing class. "I listened to the boys read their stories and offered my comments," he said.

His own comment on what he heard in that class: "The progress of almost every student was remarkable. I saw their stories from the first of the semester to the last and they certainly compared favorably with what I saw in classes I used to teach." Humphrey was a member of the Bard College faculty for nine years.

Humphrey said the students he observed in the creative writing class, like many college students, "don't have enough experience to know what is usable in fiction."

"I did find them remarkably mature in accepting criticism of their stories from Dr. MacDonald and from each other," he said.

Humphrey also gave lectures in several advanced English classes and said he was pleased to find the students did not stand in awe of him because he was a well-known writer. Humphrey said he was very pleased "none of them asked me such questions as: 'Do you write with a pencil or a typewriter?' or 'What should a person who wants to be a writer do—teach English or sling hash?'"

Humphrey has a very simple answer for the question of what led him into full-time writing. "I had enough of a success with Home From the Hill to give up teaching and give full time to writing."

The year at Washington and Lee was the first time Humphrey had lived in the South in twenty years, although he was born in Texas and attended Southern Methodist University and the University of Texas.

"After being away from the South so long, my accent had started to clear up," he said, "but it's beginning to thicken again. My wife even has trouble understanding me now."

The Humphreys enjoyed their stay at Lexington. "My wife and I have just fallen in love with the landscape here. It's one of the most beautiful places I've seen." The couple often went for long walks across the fields around "Rose Hill" to enjoy the scenery.

The South, particularly Texas, is the setting for both Home From the Hill and the novel just completed. Asked why he wrote about the region if he hadn't lived there for so long, Humphrey answered: "It's like being a Jew, you never get over it."

"The writer who is a Southerner is blessed because things happened here with a finality and a violence that is a gold mine for a writer. But the South as literature is getting like these fields out here—used up," he said, pointing out the window to the fields he has walked over so often this year.

But he believes there is still something left in the South for the fiction writer.

Right now nothing particular that he observed during his stay at Washington and Lee seems to be usable in his writing, but he pointed out he can easily lapse into an accent with people and he did this with some who came to make deliveries at his house. "I've heard a lot of good anecdotes that you really can't miss hearing and they might be useful some time. You never can tell."

This quiet, soft-spoken man who wears a blue work shirt and corduroy pants around his house—and what he calls his "Professor Higgins" hat when he goes for a walk—said about the only way to describe how he felt when he finished a book was "scared."

"You're not scared that the publishers will turn it down or of what the reviewers will say, but it's so much a part of you, you've lived with it so long, you can't judge it."

"When you have it in the house so long and then send it away, it's like a growth was cut off. You feel relieved—and naked."

Humphrey pointed to the manuscript of the new novel on the table beside him and said he was making the final changes and corrections before it went to the publisher. "I know some parts just aren't right, but finally you reach a point where you just have to stop, to cut it off, just quit and hope."

Neither could he define exactly what makes a book a success. "Sure you have a structure. You know what you want to get down on paper when you begin but ten pages later, it's all shot to hell. You just know a certain passage is right or it isn't. There aren't any real rules for success," he said.

And what comes next? "One reason I've been so long writing this book," he said, "is because I have two other novels and a book of short stories going."

"I don't know, I suppose I'll turn to one of the novels, but maybe the short stories. That was what I did first and is my first love."

Humphrey and his wife will be going to England for the summer, taking with them many fond memories of their year at Washington and Lee.

And certainly Lexington and Washington and Lee will remember them fondly and be watching for the new book eagerly. Someday, perhaps, there may be a setting or character from the University in some future work of one of the country's most promising writers.

National Leadership Society Returns To the Place of Its Founding to Pay Homage to Six Surviving Members Who Gave Birth to the Lofty "ODK Idea"

ON THE CAMPUSES of one hundred and eleven American colleges and universities, membership in Omicron Delta Kappa is an honor often second only to Phi Beta Kappa as a mark of collegiate achievement. On some of these campuses, because ODK emphasizes qualities of leadership and campus citizenship as well as good scholarship, the ODK key is worn more proudly than that of the oldest of college fraternal organizations.

In the half century since ODK's founding, some 40,000 men have been tapped for membership in "the laurel-crowned circle" of the society. But none covet their selection more than the 933 Washington and Lee men who belong or have belonged to the Alpha Circle of the university where Omicron Delta Kappa was founded fifty years ago.

This year, in recognition of the Golden Anniversary of the national honorary leadership society, Omicron Delta Kappa held its national convention in Roanoke on April 23-25. Highlight of the event was an all-day pilgrimage by the 250 delegates to Washington and Lee for ceremonies commemorating the founding and honoring the founders.

Of the fifteen original members of the Alpha Circle, six survive, and of these, four were able to attend the anniversary convocation at Washington and Lee. Dr. William Brown, '14, of St. Petersburg, Fla., and Carl S. Davidson, '15, of York, Pa., were absent because of poor health, but Thomas M. Glasgow, '16L, came from Charlotte, N. C., Dr. James E. Bear, '15, came from Richmond, and Willam C. Raftery, '16, came from Ashland, Va. And, of course, there was Prof. Rupert N. Latture, '15, professor emeritus of his University, who has spent most of his 72 years in Lexington and at Washington and Lee.

When ODK men speak of the purpose of their society, they refer often to the "ODK idea." It is, actually, a threefold statement of purpose:

"First, to recognize men who have attained a high standard of efficiency in collegiate activities and to inspire in others to strive for conspicuous attainments along similar lines;

"Second, to bring together the most representative men in all phases of collegiate life and thus to create an organization which will help to mould the sentiment of the institution on questions of local and intercollegiate interest;

"Third, to bring together members of the faculty and the student body of the institution on a basis of mutual interest and understanding."

In their first thoughts of a society which would recognize campus leadership, the founders perhaps did not state their purposes so precisely, but the ODK idea began as just that, an idea that took shape from the conversations of two college roommates, Rupert Latture and the late J. Carl Fisher, both of them student instructors at Washington and Lee in 1914. Later, one evening following a meeting of the Graham-Lee Literary Society, the two brought another student instructor, Bill Brown, into the discussion. There, on the steps in Washington Hall where they sat talking, the idea became a working plan. Other student leaders were involved, as were a select group of faculty, and on December 3, 1914, the Alpha Circle was founded with fifteen members.

In addition to those already mentioned, the founders included President Henry Louis Smith, Prof. De la Warr Benjamin Easter, Prof. David Carlisle Humphreys, Edward Parks Davis, Edward A. Donahue, Philip P. Gibson, John E. Martin, and John P. Richardson, Jr.

Nothing at the start suggested a nationwide growth of the society, but the idea was a good one, boosted at Johns Hopkins by Dr. Robert W. Dickey, '11, and other Washington and Lee students in graduate school there, and at Pittsburgh through the debate team which visited Lexington and carried the

Excerpts from Speeches by Presidents Cole and Shannon

"I want you to know that the conditions which gave rise to the ODK idea still exist in dynamic ways at the place of its founding. They exist because our students respond to the inspiration of ODK and Washington and Lee. And they exist, too, because our students have the privilege and honor of knowing personally one of the founders, Professor Rupert Latture.

"My friendship with Professor Latture is a privilege that I shall treasure always, for I can see in his life of service to Washington and Lee the fibre and character of the fraternity he helped establish.

"The qualities of leadership can be found in men of greatly diverse temperament and attitudes. Where some may lead by exhortations of strong words or spectacular deeds, others inspire their fellowmen by the example of their everyday confrontation of life. Professor Latture, to me, is a signal example of how a man can extend his influence to others through a life of quiet leadership and service."

—President Cole

"For a national society uniting leadership and honor, Robert E. Lee stands as the noblest embodiment of these two concepts. By definition, leadership means guiding or conducting—showing the way. A leader is 'a person who goes before the guide.' To be a leader, therefore, one has to be ahead of the crowd; one has to be in the forefront, whether in ideas, ideals, or actions; and in going before to guide, a leader has to believe in his own knowledge of the way and in the validity of the goal to be achieved. In other words, leadership requires vision; and genuine leadership involves unselfishness and responsibility. Honor is respect given to worth. It is another word for nobility of character, for absolute integrity in word and deed. Honor also carries a strong connotation of obligation; so that leadership and honor join, through the implications of responsibility and obligation, in the idea of service, which is labor for the benefit of others. By leadership, honor, and service, we justify the Laurel Crowned Circle of our motto."

—President Shannon

idea back to the North. Davidson College was an early applicant for a charter.

This year, shortly before the opening of the Golden Anniversary Convention, Erskine College in Due West, S. C., (the late President Gaines' birthplace) became the 111th college circle chartered. The University of Hawaii circle was chartered in 1955.

The 50th Anniversary convention program was impressive. Secretary of State Dean Rusk, who was once president of the Davidson College circle as an undergraduate, was scheduled to address the opening convocation at Hotel Roanoke, April 23, but a White House conference interfered. Instead, delegates heard a major policy statement on Cuba from the State Department's No. 2 man, Undersecretary of State George W. Ball.

When the convention moved to Lexington the next day, the schedule was tight. Delegates saw the campuses of Virginia Military Institute and Washington and Lee, attended a reception at the home of President and Mrs. Cole, posed for the official anniversary photograph before Washington Hall, and then gathered in Evans Hall for luncheon, a concert by the Glee Club, and an address by President Cole.

Delegates went to province meetings after lunch, then reassembled in Lee Chapel for a special program of recognition for the founders and a model initiation ceremony. With student officers of the Alpha Circle in charge, three new members were taken into the "laurel-crowned circle" of ODK. Edward J. Dinkel, '64L, was initiated into the Washington and Lee circle, while Virginia Tech's circle honored Tech's own Sydner Hummer Byrne and a Washington and Lee alumnus, Edward H. Ould, '29, president of Roanoke's First National Exchange Bank.

Speaker at the Lee Chapel meeting was President Edgar F. Shannon, Jr., of the University of Virginia, who was tapped for ODK membership when an undergraduate at Washington and Lee in 1939.

Back in Roanoke that evening, delegates at the banquet heard an illustrated talk by Barry C. Bishop, secretary of the National Geographic's committee for research and exploration. The son of the ODK General Council's secretary, Dean Robert W. Bishop of the University of Cincinnati, Bishop talked about and showed color slides of the American 1963 expedition to Mt. Everest. Bishop himself was one of six who reached the summit of the world's loftiest mountain.

On the convention's final day, Dean Bishop, who had served twenty-seven years as ODK secretary and editor of its journal, was elected national president, succeeding President G. Herbert Smith of Willamette University, Salem, Ore.

No one enjoyed the convention

more than did Professor Latture. For him, it was three days of fulfillment, of deserved tribute from the General Council, the convention at large, from President Cole and President Shannon. President Smith urged undergraduate delegates to seek him out and meet the man who shared first the ODK idea.

But perhaps the most meaningful gesture for Professor Latture came in an unplanned way. From somewhere in the 111 circles had come a request for a society coat of arms to be designed. The request had sufficient backing to cause the national headquarters to commission an artist to prepare a design. It was on display, in its heraldic finery, at the final session. The committee in charge recommended that it not be accepted, but opposition to the motion was expected.

It never came. Also on display was a beautifully polished six-foot mahogany replica of the simple ODK Key, recently fashioned and brought to the convention by the Georgia Tech circle. One by one delegates rose to denounce the need for a coat of arms when "the key we all love," as one put it, serves every purpose that a crest might.

The vote to forget about coats of arms was unanimous, and Professor Latture smiled quietly. This was the most gratifying tribute of all, for he had designed the ODK key himself fifty years ago in philosophy class at Washington and Lee.

A Changing Pattern Characterizes "Religious Emphasis" at the University

By DR. LOUIS W. HODGES
Assistant Professor of Religion

ONE OF THE MOST significant developments in this century in the field of religion has been the renewed attempt to relate religious faith meaningfully to the daily life of men. On college campuses these efforts have produced such programs as "Religious Emphasis Weeks" and other types of religious conferences. Since the spring of 1961 an important experiment has been underway at Washington and Lee, an experiment which now seems to merit some attention and evaluation.

Washington and Lee since its earliest days has acknowledged officially the importance of the Christian faith to our civilization. The University continues to recognize "the Christian ideal" as one of the two "enduring adherences" of this institution, the other being our dedication to the democratic form of social organization. The first by-law of the University makes it quite clear that Washington and Lee rejects any form of sectarian domination while accepting Christianity and its ideals.

Part of the tangible expression of this "enduring adherence" of the University is the support of the University Christian Association and its various programs for acquainting students with Christian principles and ideals. While the U.C.A. operates in a number of areas of student life, the lion's share of its financial resources and effort is used to invite leaders from outside the University to deal with timely topics from a religious point of view.

Until the mid-fifties the specific structure for accomplishing that end was the annual "Religious Emphasis Week." During "REW" a number of speakers were brought to campus to provide inspiration and education along religious lines. The program of the week, usually about three days in fact, was begun with a compulsory assembly of the entire student body in the gymnasium for the first of three addresses by the major speaker. This was ordinarily followed by meetings of small groups with the several leaders for informal conversation on topics related to the central theme of the week. Classes were opened to the guests who spoke and led discussions on religious subjects. The same basic program was maintained through the fall of 1961, though under a new name for the last several years, as the "University Religious Conference."

Several weaknesses in the very structure of Religious Emphasis Week, or University Religious Conference, became apparent as the program began to lose its effectiveness. For one thing, the gymnasium packed with a "captive" audience proved to be an unsuitable environment for either education or inspiration. Another key problem was that the entire religious program was compressed into one brief period and consequently largely forgotten for the remainder of the year. Still another difficulty was that the full year's program collapsed if one conference proved not to measure up to expectations. Better ways of meeting the University's self-designated responsibility for student religious life had to be sought.

In the spring of 1961 the cabinet of the University Christian Association and the Faculty Committee on Christian Work approved in principle several experimental modifications of the program. The new program was labeled "Seminars in Religion," a name inspired by the already established "Seminars in Literature." Under the new system three smaller conferences, each of two days' duration, replaced the one three-day Religious Emphasis Week. In a typical Seminar one guest lecturer is invited to give two public lectures and to meet selected classes in the Department of Religion and in the co-sponsoring department. The guest is urged to make himself available for private or small group consultation after each public lecture and at other appropriate times during his visit.

This change in policy has allowed a number of advantages, not the least of which is that it provides for a more comprehensive program of religious activity to keep the Christian ideal more constantly in mind. It likewise made it possible to deal with several topics during the year and thus to widen the base of appeal and interest to students. The gratifying result has been that more student interests have been touched.

Another shift in policy is perhaps more far-reaching than the breaking down of the one annual session into three smaller conferences. The Seminars in Religion are specifically aimed at relating religious faith meaningfully to life by stimulating significant dialogue between the Christian faith and the various academic disciplines in the University. Each Seminar is thus sponsored by the University Christian Association, the Department of Religion, and one other department within the University. This specific purpose, incidentally, grows out of the conviction that the modern university all too often becomes a multiversity in which several legitimate but circumscribed approaches are made to the same problems of humanity. Thus the Seminars program is also related to distant rumblings in the academic world which promise for the future a larger quest for the unity of human knowledge.

In order to stimulate this kind of dialogue between Christianity and other fields of learning the Seminars in Religion bring to campus speakers who are not only recognized authorities in their special discipline but who also understand basic Christianity and its relation to that discipline. Since the spring of 1961 Seminars have been conducted in six fields—English, economics, psychology, sociology, biology, and law. Chairmen in these and other departments have entered the program with enthusiasm.

Most recently the Student Bar Association in the Law School joined with the Christian Association and the Department of Religion in sponsoring a "Seminar in Religion and Law" with Professor Samuel E. Stumpf of Vanderbilt University speaking on "The Moral Order and the Legal Order."

The final value of any such enterprise at a University is to be determined, of course, by the quality of the ideas expressed and the interest developed by the participants. On both these criteria the Seminars have shown real promise. In one of the earliest Seminars, for example, Dr. William R. Mueller of Goucher College traced interests and themes in several contemporary writers which parallel the traditional interests of Christian theology. He developed the thesis that while modern writers are seldom as consciously and deliberately Biblical as a man like John Bunyan they nevertheless are occupied with the same human concerns found in Biblical literature. In this connection he dealt with selected works of Dostoevski, Graham Greene, and Camus, among others.

J. Kenneth Morland, Chairman of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Randolph-Macon Woman's College, dealt with one of the most pressing problems in contemporary religion, "Moral Relativism and Religious Faith." Dr. Morland showed how differences between cultures on rules of human conduct—e.g., we would feel guilty about having more than one wife whereas in some societies men would feel guilty if they did not—raise important questions for the Christian. These lectures served to highlight the perennial problem relating sociological and theological approaches to moral principles.

Samuel E. Stumpf, Chairman of the Department of Philosophy at Vanderbilt, developed the thesis that the system of laws in a society is properly to be regarded as the "arm of morality." Laws of a society are tangible expressions of the goals or "moral" ends which that society seeks. Dr. Stumpf then traced backward from laws to morals to theology in an order of logical priority. The ethical goals of a society reflect and grow out of that society's view of ultimate reality of "god." These goals, in turn, mold the laws by which conduct is regulated. So it is that religion and law are directly linked by systems of morality.

One of the more exciting seminars was led by Dr. Ralph T. Overman, a nuclear physicist and active Christian layman at Oak Ridge. In a "Seminar in Religion and Biology" on the subject of "Religion and Science" Dr. Overman delivered two lectures under the titles "A Christian Looks at Science" and "A Scientist Looks at Christianity." The thesis in these lectures was that we come to know what we know in science in basically the same way that we come to know what we know in religion. Scientists take the data of experience and fit them together into useful mental constructs which show why things behave as they do. The theologian does the same thing except that his data concern the personal or spiritual side of man rather than the physical world. Thus, Overman concluded, since the scientist and the theologian share the same approach or method there is no reason for them to be quarrelsome or at odds with each other. Neither is inherently more respectable or authentic than the other.

Such ideas as these have proved immensely stimulating to those who participate in the Seminars. The present plan is to continue this basic approach in religion on campus. It has thus far proved to be one very valuable way in which Washington and Lee can express its "enduring adherence" to the Christian ideal.

Renovation of Reid Hall as a Home For Journalism and Communications Will Be Completed for September Use

THE REMODELING of Reid Hall as a new home for Washington and Lee University's Department of Journalism and Communications is nearly complete.

D. E. Brady, Jr., the university's Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds, said the construction work is on schedule. Plans call for the department to move into its new quarters during the summer. The facilities will go into use at the beginning of the 1964-65 academic year.

Located behind the group of buildings forming the university's well-known colonnade, Reid Hall was constructed in 1904. The physics department formerly occupied the structure until moving into Washington and Lee's new science building last year.

Renovation of Reid Hall for the journalism department began in October, 1963. When completed it will provide modern and complete facilities for the academic program of the department as well as for laboratories for newspaper procedures, advertising, radio and television, photography, public relations, and motion picture production.

O. W. Riegel, department chairman, said instruction puts major emphasis on academic study of the subject, reflecting the university's liberal arts tradition. He said the heart of the department's new facilities will be the second floor of Reid Hall which will contain classrooms, library, seminar room, and offices.

A classroom seating approximately 100 students will take up one whole side of the second floor. Seats will be arranged on elevated tiers facing a lecture platform. A projection booth is being installed in the rear. A special sound system will permit radio programs produced in third floor studios to be piped into the classroom or lectures given in the room can be recorded in a control booth on the third floor.

The library on the second floor will house the department's collection of books, periodicals, and newspapers, as well as historical and other archive material. Other second floor facilities will include faculty offices, a seminar room, a student lounge, and a film storage and editing room.

Riegel said the department also recognizes that students need practical experience in journalism and communications and pointed out the first and third floors are being equipped to meet this requirement.

Three sound-proofed, air-conditioned broadcasting studios of varying sizes will take up half of the third floor. One control room will serve all three studios and have windows opening into each of them.

Broadcasting facilities will be used by students taking the department's radio and television courses. Also programs on Radio Washington and Lee and Home Edition—its daily 15-minute news broadcast—will originate here. These programs are broadcast over the Lexington radio station, WREL.

A room patterned after a newspaper newsroom will occupy the other side of the third floor. It will be equipped with typewriter desks and a semi-circular copy desk. Students interested in newspaper writing and editing will use these facilities. Two Associated Press teletypes will be installed in a separate room nearby to serve both the newsroom and the broadcasting studios.

Other third floor facilities will include a tape storage and editing room, a phonograph record storage room, a newsroom for Home Edition, an advertising laboratory and drafting room, and faculty offices.

Up under the eaves of the fourth floor will be a photographic laboratory with separate rooms for developing and printing.

The first floor of Reid Hall will house the Journalism Laboratory

Press now in a small separate building on campus. In its new location there will be separate composing, linotype and press rooms. Windows in each of these rooms will be bricked up, isolating noise from other parts of the building and campus. Other first floor rooms will include storage space, offices, mail room and workroom with a separate entrance for staffers of the Ring-tum Phi, student newspaper.

A group of newspaper and broadcasting executives has served as an advisory committee to the journalism department in planning the new facilities.

They are: M. W. Armistead, III, president of the Times-World Corporation, Roanoke, Va.; Thomas R. Glass, vice president of the Lynchburg Daily Advance; Henry P. Johnston, broadcasting consultant, Birmingham, Ala.; William G. Leverty, assistant managing editor, The Times-Dispatch, Richmond, Va.; Albert W. Moss, executive vice-president, Standard Rate and Data Service, New York; Gilmore N. Nunn, broadcasting station owner and executive, Lexington, Ky.; Walter Potter, editor and publisher, The Star-Exponent, Culpeper, Va.; James B. L. Rush, executive news editor, The Journal and The Twin City Sentinel, Winston-Salem, N. C.; Harold Sugg, vice-president and assistant publisher, The Virginian-Pilot and The Ledger-Star, Norfolk, Va.; Sol Taishoff, editor and publisher, Broadcasting magazine, Washington, D. C.; Dudley A. White, executive vice-president, publisher and editor, The Register, Sandusky, Ohio; and Cranston Williams of Lynchburg Va., consultant to and former secretary-manager of the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

W. W. Coffey of Lexington is contractor for the renovation and Clark, Nexsen and Owen, architects of Lynchburg, Va., did the preliminary planning.

Babcock & Wilcox Company Helps University Nuclear Science Program

EXECUTIVES of the Babcock & Wilcox Company's Atomic Energy Division and instructors of Washington and Lee University's new nuclear physics course met early this semester to discuss current developments in their field.

R. H. Harrison, vice-president of The Atomic Energy Division of B&W and John W. Landis, manager of the division located in Lynchburg, climaxed a February visit to Washington and Lee with a look at the university's new nuclear physics laboratory.

A nuclear physics course was offered for the first time this semester at Washington and Lee for eight senior majors. Equipment for the course's laboratory was purchased with a recent $15,000 grant from the Atomic Energy Commission.

Showing the B&W officials the new equipment and explaining the new course was Dr. Edward F. Turner, Jr., chairman of Washington and Lee's physics department and William B. Newbolt, who teaches the nuclear physics course.

Earlier in the visit, Harrison and Landis gave Washington and Lee President Fred C. Cole ideas and suggestions for the new physics course and other nuclear physics instruction which might be offered.

Harrison and Landis met other members of Washington and Lee's science faculty at a luncheon in their honor at the University's Evans Dining Hall. The visitors also toured the campus and made a thorough inspection of Washington and Lee's science facilities including the new science building now in its second year of use.

The meeting was another step in a working relationship between Babcock & Wilson and Washington and Lee. Earlier this year physics students and faculty visited B&W's facilities in Lynchburg and met the company's scientists and engineers. B&W's Nuclear Development Center determined the hydrogen content of Ti-Ni specimens for Washington and Lee's physics department. The equipment to perform the analysis is currently beyond Washington and Lee's budget.

UNDERGRADUATES

■ JERE D. CRAVENS, holding the highest scholastic record in the senior class, has been selected by the faculty as valedictorian of the Class of 1964.

He will deliver the valedictory address at commencement exercises June 5.

A chemistry major, Cravens has a cumulative grade-point ratio of 2.999, with 3.0 representing an A average. He was elected to Phi Beta Kappa his junior year and was named Outstanding Sophomore by that group the preceding year. He is president of Sigma Phi Epsilon, social fraternity, president of Alpha Epsilon Delta, pre-medical fraternity, and is an officer of Phi Eta Sigma, national freshman honor society.

Cravens is manager of the Glee Club, of which he has been a member for four years, and is president of the Concert Guild. He is vice president of the senior class and a member of Omicron Delta Kappa, leadership fraternity.

After graduation, he plans to attend Washington University Medical School and to enter a career of medical research in the field of biochemistry.

■ JAMES E. KULP, a second-year law student from Roanoke, was elected president of the student body for 1964-65 in elections held April 16.

The University Party swept the top three positions, losing only the Fancy Dress presidency to the Progressive Party.

Other elected officers, all of whom are juniors, were James W.

DeYoung, Kenilworth, Ill., vice president; and Malcolm Morris, Richmond, secretary. Richard R. Kreitler, Short Hills, N. J., was elected president of Fancy Dress.

■ EDITORS AND STAFFS of next year's publications have been elected by the Publications Board.

Named to head the Tuesday edition of the Ring-tum Phi was Stephen P. Smith, a junior from Jacksonville, Fla. Richard N. Carrell, a junior from Pensacola, Fla., was elected business manager.

The Board elected Arthur B. Sher, of Miami, Fla., and Richard K. Kreitler, Short Hills, N. J., coeditors of the 1956 Calyx. Mark M. Applefeld, Baltimore, Md., will be the new business manager.

Andrew N. Baur, a sophomore from St. Louis, Mo., will edit the Southern Collegian and James W. DeYoung, Kenilworth, Ill., will serve as business manager of the humor magazine.

■ EDWARD R. CAHOON, JR., of Chesapeake, has been awarded the Phi Beta Kappa Sophomore Award for 1964.

Cahoon is a graduate of Oscar Frommel Smith High School in South Norfolk where he was valedictorian of his class. He is on a Baker Scholarship. He is a member of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity and of the Student Service Society.

The annual Award goes to the sophomore with the highest scholastic average for the first three semesters of his college career.

■ ONE OF THE COUNTRY'S leading scholar critics addressed Washington and Lee's annual Phi Beta Kappa-Cincinnati Society Convocation on April 13.

Cleanth Brooks, Gray Professor of Rhetoric at Yale University, spoke in Lee Chapel on "American Innocence as Viewed by Henry James, F. Scott Fitzgerald and William Faulkner."

The name of Cleanth Brooks is well known to Washington and Lee students of several generations. With Robert Penn Warren, he is the editor of Understanding Poetry, the textbook that was used in freshman English for many years.

Brooks has been professor of English literature at Yale since 1947. For 15 years before that, he was professor at Louisiana State University. He also has taught at the Universities of Texas, Michigan, and Chicago.

The convocation on April 13 also commemorated the generosity of the Society of the Cincinnati in Virginia to Washington and Lee University. In 1802 this group of former officers of the Continental Army voted to give the university an accumulated fund which, when received, amounted to about $25,000.

Seventeen men were initiated into the honorary scholastic society following the Convocation: They were:

Seniors: Roger E. Allen, Jr., Lynchburg, William D. Angel, Huntington, W. Va., Alfred E.

Eckes, Jr., Ardmore, Pa., Kenneth G. Everett, Bastrop, La., Robert A. Kell, Hannonfield, N. J., Richard W. McEnally, New Bern, N. C., William H. Marmion, Jr., Roanoke, William B. Ogilvie, Jr., Shreveport, La., James W. Ramsey, Jr., Greenville, Thomas D. Supak, Virginia Beach, Jimmy T. Sylvester, Las Vegas, Nev., Tain P. Tompkins, Hillsborough, Calif., and Frank W. Wright, Blaksburg.

Elected from the Class of 1963 were Edwin L. Kerr, Ridgefield, Conn., now at Columbia University on the combined engineering program, and Daniel H. Markstein, III, Birmingham, Ala., a magna cum laude graduate.

Senior law student Donald H. Partington, Springfield.

James Paxton Davis, Jr., professor of Journalism. Professor Davis, a graduate of Johns Hopkins University, is author of Two Soldiers and The Battle of New Market. He is book editor of the Roanoke Times.

■ FIVE SENIORS have been appointed Woodrow Wilson Fellows for graduate study next fall and two seniors have won Fulbright scholarships.

Winners of the Woodrow Wilson Fellowships are Alfred E. Eckes, Jr., of Ardmore, Pa., who is also a Fulbright winner, Robert A. Kell, Haddonfield, N. J., Edward M. Norton, Butler, Pa., Thomas D. Supak, Virginia Beach, and Frank W. Wright, Blacksburg.

Also receiving a Fulbright was William A. Noell, Bluefield, W. Va.

Four of the seniors, Eckes, Kell, Supak, and Wright, are members of Phi Beta Kappa.

Noell, retiring president of the student body, will do his study at the University of Frankfurt, Germany. Eckes will be doing graduate study in economics at Christ's College, Cambridge.

■ CADET AWARDS were presented during the annual President's Day Parade of the Reserve Officers Training Corps April 28.

These four awards are presented to cadets of each class who are designated for outstanding ability, military bearing, and excellence in participation in the ROTC program.

The ROTC Gold Medal award went to Cadet Sergeant Richard N. Carrell, Pensacola, Fla., a junior. Winners of the Virginia Society, Sons of the American Revolution ROTC Medals were Cadet Lt. Col. Peter McC. Candler, Atlanta, Ga., Cadet Maj. Richard I. H. Belser, Columbia, S. C., James H. Wallenstein, Dallas, Tex., and Cadet Maj. Leslie C. Rucker, Jr., Arlington. All are seniors.

The awards were presented by President Fred C. Cole and Lt. Col.

Jack P. Burch, professor of military science.

FACULTY

■ DEAN FRANK J. GILLIAM continues his steady recovery at his home, Belfield, in Lexington, following a serious heart attack suffered while visiting alumni in Cincinnati on March 13.

■ DR. FELIX WELCH, head of the mathematics department, is one of 20 mathematics instructors in the United States invited to attend a writing session this summer to prepare a filmed year course in calculus for classroom use.

He will attend the eight-week session at Stanford University, sponsored by the Committee on Educational Media of the Mathematical Association of America. The session will extend from June 22 to August 15.

■ DR. C. WESTBROOK BARRITT, professor of romance languages, presented a paper, "A Problem in Transformational Grammar," during the University of Kentucky's 17th Language Conference which was held April 23 to 25.

■ RECENT STORIES and articles published by members of the faculty include the following:

In The Iron Worker, "David Hunter: Villian of the Valley. The Sack of the Virginia Military Institute," by Dr. Cecil D. Eby, Jr., associate professor of English.

Former FCC chairman NEWTON MINOW, left, was the principal speaker, and LOUIS LYONS, right, of Boston, was the winning commentator at the annual Alfred I. duPont Awards Foundation dinner in Washington. PRESIDENT COLE, center, also presented duPont Awards to stations WJZ-TV of Baltimore and WFBM of Indianapolis.

Dr. Leonard E. Jarrard, associate professor of Psychology, "Effects of D-Lysergic Acid Diethylamide on Operant Behavior in the Rat," in Psychopharmacologia; and "Effects of X-Irradiation on Operant Behavior in the Rat" in Journal of Comparative and Psychological Psychology.

In Nieman Reports, "The Kennedy Story" by O. W. Riegel, head of the Journalism Department.

Dr. Charles W. Williams, associate professor of mathematics, "Scheduling Students by Computer," in Computer Application Service.

In Journal of Chemical Education, "A Eutectic Experiment" by Dr. John H. Wise, professor of chemistry, and Dr. J. K. Shillington and Dr. W. J. Watt, associate professors of chemistry.

Dr. C. F. Phillips, Jr., associate professor of economics, with George R. Hall, "Antimerger Criteria: Power, Concentration, Foreclosure and Size" in Villanova Law Review, Winter 1963; Dr. Phillips, "What is Wrong with Profit Maximization?" in Business Horizons, Winter 1963; Dr. Harmon H. Haymes, assistant professor of economics, and Dr. Phillips, "Banking in Virginia: The 1962 Legislation" in Washington and Lee Law Review, Spring 1964.

■ IN OCTOBER, Dr. Leonard E. Jarrard, associate professor of psychology, participated in a National Science Foundation Conference on Undergraduate Research Programs in Psychology in Minneapolis, Minn. Dr. Jarrard, in November, served on an NSF panel for the evaluation of proposals in the NSF Undergraduate Science Education Program at Washington, D. C.

Dr. William M. Hinton, head of the department of psychology, participated in a December Conference on Programed Instruction sponsored by the Virginia Education Association in Roanoke. In February, he served on an NSF panel to review proposals submitted to the NSF Undergraduate Instructional Scientific Equipment Program at Boston, Mass.

■ THE UNIVERSITY PRESS of Virginia is publishing in May a volume entitled Liberty Hall Volunteers: Stonewall's College Boys, written by Dr. William Gleason Bean, professor of history emeritus and former head of Washington and Lee's history department.

The book tells the story of the students at Washington College who helped form a volunteer company of infantry which subsequently was to fight in every major battle of the Army of Northern Virginia from June, 1861, until the company's capture at Spottsylvania Court House in May, 1964.

Dr. Bean's book is not a military history. Instead, he has drawn upon letters, diaries, and reminiscences of members of the college company to tell a story of young men, essentially boys, at war as members of the famous Stonewall Brigade.

LAW SCHOOL

■ JOHN RITCHIE, Dean of the Northwestern University School of Law, delivered the 16 annual John Randolph Tucker Lectures at Washington and Lee University on April 10-11.

The theme of his two addresses was "Legal Education in the United States." Dean Ritchie dealt with the history of legal education in his first lecture, using as his topic "Yesterday." He considered the present and future of legal training in the second, speaking on the subject, "Today and Tomorrow."

The Tucker Lectures were established by the board of trustees of Washington and Lee University in 1949 in honor of John Randolph Tucker's long service as dean of the University's School of Law.

Dean Ritchie, who is also president of the Association of American Law Schools, holds degrees from the University of Virginia and Yale University law schools.

Before assuming his present position, he was assistant dean of the University of Virginia law school and dean of the Washington University and University of Wisconsin law schools.

The Washington and Lee Law School Association also held its annual meeting the weekend of the Tucker Lectures. An open house in Tucker Hall, which houses the Law School, after the Friday evening lecture honored returning Law School alumni.

After the Saturday lecture, the association met for lunch followed by their annual meeting. Officers elected were Waldo G. Miles, '38L, of Bristol, president; Willis M. Anderson, '52L, Roanoke, vice president; and R. E. R. Huntley, associate professor of law, secretary-treasurer.

Elected members of the Council were Judge Morris C. Montgomery, '30L, Lawrenceburg, Ky., Alfred D. Noyes, '32L, Rockville, Md., E. Marshall Nuckols, Jr., '35L, Bucks County, Pa., and Fred M. Vinson, '51L, Washington, D. C.

At the annual Law School reception after the Friday lecture, President Cole accepted from the Student Bar Association a portrait of Professor Charles R. McDowell to hang in Tucker Hall.

THE CAMPUS

■ THE CONCERT Guild sponsored concerts by the Carnegie String Quartet, a return engagement, on March 11, and the Group for Contemporary Music on March 23.

■ THREE PROGRAMS were sponsored by the newly-formed-this-year Student Concert Society. Presented March 12 was a vocal recital by three student singers, John Baker, Suffolk, and Philip Booth, Chevy Chase, Md., both seniors, and William Supon, Jacksonville, Ala. The Minx Jazz Quintet gave a program on March 24 and on May 10 the Society presented Martha Anne Dorminy, a senior piano major from Hollins College.

■ THE GLEE CLUB sang a program of religious music with the Randolph-Macon Glee Club at the Lexington Presbyterian Church on March 24.

The spring concert was sung with the Longwood Choir on April 30.

■ DELORES JONES, soprano, was presented in a recital May 19 by Re-Vue.

SPEAKERS

■ SAMUEL GOLDWYN, JR., son of one of the most celebrated producers in film history, spoke on "The Motion Picture Today" in a Journalism Department sponsored lecture March 5.

■ TWO OF THE Richmond newspapers' best known writers spoke in mid-March. Charles McDowell, Jr., '48, syndicated columnist, spoke on "Politics in Virginia." He was sponsored by the Washington and Lee and VMI affiliates of the National Committee for Education in Politics. Sponsored by the Southern Conservative, James J. Kilpatrick, editor of the Richmond News Leader, spoke on "Some Observations of 1984."

■ SPONSORED jointly by the Greek and Latin Department and the VMI English Department, Antony A. Raubitschek, associate professor of classics at Princeton University, lectured in March on "Periclean Athens."

■ LESLIE A. FIEDLER, professor of English Literature and Director of Humanities at Montana State University, was sponsored by the English Department March 25 when he spoke on "The Image of the Negro and Indian in American Literature."

■ IN THE final Seminar in Literature for this school year, Shelby Foote, novelist and historian, delivered a lecture entitled "Writing" on April 27.

■ DR. DIETER BAUMANN, lecturer at the Jung Institute in Zurich, spoke April 29 on "The Impact of C. G. Jung." He was sponsored by the University Christian Association.

■ AS A GUEST of the Geology Department, Dr. Ralph Miller, senior geologist with the U. S. Geological Survey, gave a series of lectures in mid-May. He spoke on "Oil and Gas Possibilities in Virginia" and "Appalachian Structural Geology." Dr. Miller's visit was under the auspices of the American Geological Institute.

The Troubadours' spring production was Shaw's Androcles and the Lion. LOCK HANDLEY plays Androcles above, and TIM MORTON is the lion.

GIFTS

■ WASHINGTON AND LEE University has received a $1,213 grant for unrestricted use from Gulf Oil Corporation. It is one of 692 awards, totaling $500,000 that Gulf will distribute this year under its Aid-to-Education program.

PBK Honors Three Star Football Men

COACH LEE McLaughlin believes his 1963 first unit line may have been the "smartest" college football forewall in the nation.

Three of his first stringers—end Buck Ogilvie, Shreveport, La.; tackle Jim Sylvester, Las Vegas, Nev.; and guard Bill Angel, Huntington, W. Va.—have been initiated into Washington and Lee's chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, national scholastic honor society.

All three earned three varsity football letters apiece, the last two seasons as members of the Generals' first unit. Ogilvie and Sylvester were named to the Associated Press All-Virginia small college first team, as well as to the all-star team of the College Athletic Conference.

"I think it's remarkable to have had three outstanding scholar-athletes playing alongside each other in the same line," says McLaughlin. "I doubt if any other college in the country could boast three Phi Beta Kappa boys on their entire squad, let alone their starting team."

Ogilvie is a mathematics major who will attend graduate school at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Sylvester did pre-medical work at Washington and Lee and will study medicine at Stanford University. Angel majored in contemporary civilization and will study next year at the Graduate School for English-speaking Students at the University of Stockholm in Sweden.

The football record they helped compile is almost as impressive as their academic credentials. In their three years of varsity play, the Generals won 22, lost only 4.

Verne Canfield Is Selected As Head Basketball Coach

WASHINGTON AND LEE University has named Verne Canfield, 31, as head basketball coach to succeed Bob McHenry whose resignation was announced earlier this year.

For the past six years, Canfield has been a highly successful head basketball coach at Groveton High School in Alexandria, the same community in northern Virginia where Washington and Lee turned in 1957 to find its head football coach, Lee McLaughlin. Because Canfield joins the Washington and Lee faculty as an assistant professor of physical education, his appointment was announced by Dean of the College William W. Pusey, III.

Athletic Director E. P. "Cy" Twombly said Canfield also will become tennis coach at Washington and Lee, succeeding William C. Washburn, the university's alumni secretary who has handled the tennis team with success for six years.

Twombly also announced that

Dana Swan, the Generals' freshman football coach and assistant lacrosse coach, will become head lacrosse coach in 1965. McHenry, who will go to Lebanon Valley College as head basketball coach next year, has coached both basketball and lacrosse at Washington and Lee since 1958-59.

Canfield is a native of Rosemead, Calif., and a B.A. graduate of the University of California at Santa Barbara College. He holds an M.A. degree from George Washington University and is currently working toward another advanced degree.

In his six years at Groveton Canfield's teams won 78, lost 40, and he never experienced a losing season. His best years were in 1961-62 and 1962-63 when the Tigers compiled records of 17-3 and 16-3. Last season the mark was 12-7.

Canfield also coached freshman basketball and track at Santa Barbara in 1954-55, before beginning a two-year period of Army service. In addition to his basketball work at Groveton, Canfield coached tennis, taught physical education, assisted in track and football, directed intramurals and acted as a guidance counselor. He is married and has an 18-month-old child.

Twombly said Canfield "has real enthusiasm" about the basketball job at Washington and Lee. "We got one crackerjack coach out of northern Virginia when we brought Lee McLaughlin here from Episcopal High School, and I hope we're going to do it again," Twombly said.

Canfield is heir to a basketball program at Washington and Lee that has produced only 27 victories against 65 losses in six seasons. His record at Groveton suggests he possesses remarkable curative powers. A relatively new school, Groveton had records of 3-13 and 1-15 before Canfield took over in 1958. His first team was 10-8 for the year, the fewest number of victories any of his Tiger teams were to produce.

Canfield says he is "looking forward to helping build up the basketball program at Washington and Lee University."

The General Reunion of '64 Is Expected To Bring Many Alumni Back to Lexington

A LARGE NUMBER of alumni, their wives and families, some with pleasant memories of the 1959 General Reunion, have indicated their plans to be "back for more in '64." The 1964 General Reunion on June 11-13 will mark the fourth time since 1949 that an "all classes" reunion has been held.

A full program has been planned. Included will be special banquets for the fiftieth, fortieth, twenty-fifth, and tenth anniversary classes. These classes normally hold their class reunions in May, but are joining with the general reunion to make it one of the outstanding events in the Alumni Association's history. Many alumni will have their first occasion to meet and greet President and Mrs. Cole who came to the University just following the reunion of 1959. On view will be many changes which have taken place in the physical growth of the University, highlighted by Evans Dining Hall, the new dormitories, new science and journalism facilities, and the beautifully restored Lee Chapel.

The reunion program is designed to give time for relaxation; activities are varied and incorporate events for the young and the "not so young." The anniversary class banquets will be held Thursday. The principal speaker for the convocation on Friday will be Dr. Harry Philpott, '38, vice-president of the University of Florida.

Annual Alumni Meeting on June 13

■ ANOTHER FEATURE of the General Reunion will be the annual meeting of the Washington and Lee Alumni Association in Lee Chapel on Saturday morning, June 13. All alumni are urged to attend and take part in this meeting. The newly renovated Lee Chapel is air conditioned and the results of the restoration will be of added interest to alumni.

The annual meeting is provided for under the Association's charter and by-laws and is generally devoted to reports by officers of the past year's activities, and some of the special projects on tap for the near future. Election of three new members to the Alumni Board of Trustees will be held, as well as the election of the alumni representative to the University Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics. The report of the nominating committee as prescribed by the by-laws is shown on page 19.

Regional Agents Begin Home Stretch Drive For the 1963-64 Fund

By WILLIAM C. WASHBURN
Alumni Secretary

THE COMPANION program to the class agent plan is getting under way in over eighty regions and communities. Where the class agent has contacted the alumni on his academic or law class roll by mail, the regional agent, to supplement this program, will call personally, almost neighborly, on each alumnus within his community who has not yet responded to the 1963-64 Alumni Fund campaign. The two plans are designed to aid and support one another in the success of the overall Annual Fund.

The names of the regions and their respective agents are listed on the inside cover. Each agent will recruit an average of eight to ten helpers, thus forming a host of nearly a thousand workers to urge those former students within their region who have not yet participated in the current annual fund to join this important effort. The record goal, established by Robert Kime and his Alumni Fund Council, is a challenge to every alumnus. If you are among those who have not yet made a gift to Washington and Lee this fund year, the chances are that one of these agents or his helper will be calling on you soon. He may be a friend or a neighbor—not necessarily a classmate or even contemporary in age, but in every case a dedicated alumnus who has not only made his gift to the fund but is also giving of his time and effort in this undertaking which is so important to you as an alumnus and to your University.

The goals established by the Fund Council are the highest in history. In 1956 the fund reached, for the first time, the $100,000 level. Since then, with time out for the University Development Program, the annual fund has steadily increased each year, reaching a total of $142,000 last year.

As the Regional Agents begin their work, they can be encouraged by the fact that the dollar volume is ahead of this same date last year. However, the number of contributors is lagging behind, and this is the most challenging element in the campaign. Only 26% of the alumni on the active mailing list and who receive this magazine have participated in this year's fund. This means that one out of every four is supporting Washington and Lee and higher education for the other three.

The Fund Council, in setting a contributor goal of 100%, is admittedly ambitious. Yet the members are convinced that to set an arbitrary percentage figure would miss the point. To receive support from each alumnus is indeed our goal, for all Washington and Lee men share the pride in progress at Washington and Lee.

As this magazine goes to print there are 2869 contributors to this year's fund. Last year a total of 3,905 participated to establish a record, and the Fund Council is hopeful that a significant increase can be made this year. Many colleges and universities—those of the same size and character as Washington and Lee and those with which alumni generally like to make comparisons—are able to achieve 50% to 75% participation in their annual campaigns. And they define an alumnus in the same way as does Washington and Lee. When the regional worker calls on you he is serving as your agent, for this is not a job for just a few—it is a responsibility, even a privilege, of all Washington and Lee men.

The central alumni office reports that much progress has been made on the publication of a new Alumni Directory. This will be in the hands of the publishers in May, and it is hoped that distribution of the finished copies will be possible before the close of the fund's fiscal year on June 30th. To express appreciation for thoughtful interest and support, the Council has authorized that a copy of the new directory be mailed free of charge to every man who participates in the 1963-64 Alumni Fund. The directory will be a treasured possession as well as a useful one. Every Washington and Lee man should be proud to have one. It can be a symbol of his membership in a distinguished body of men who are the Alumni of Washington and Lee.

Whether you are in one of the regional areas or not, if you have not yet registered your interest in Washington and Lee, don't wait. Make your contribution to the Alumni Fund now. You will be proud to participate in something which is great and which, with your help, will be forever enduring.

CLASS NOTES

JAMES ALEXANDER McCLURE keeps up with world events and local affairs though retired in St. Petersburg, Florida. After Washington and Lee, he graduated with a divinity degree from Union Theological Seminary in Richmond in 1902 and from Princeton Seminary in 1903. Dr. McClure was awarded an honorary Doctor of Divinity degree by Washington and Lee in 1920 after being named Moderator of the Synod of Virginia. Later he was Moderator of the Synod of Florida. The McClures had nine children, and Dr. McClure boasts today of his 30 grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Though retired, DR. S. W. SCHAEFER remains a consultant in the pulmonary division of Queens General Hospital in New York. He enjoys his small garden and greenhouse where he raises orchids, camellias, and gardenias.

RUSSELL B. WINE has been in the private practice of law in San Antonio, Texas, since 1913, except for 8½ years as assistant U.S. attorney, 4 years as assistant district attorney in the State Court, and 7 years as U.S. attorney.

Except for time out for World War I, J. J. HALBERT has been with the engineering department of the city of Jackson, Mississippi. As City Engineer and Director of Public Works, he has seen Jackson grow from 23,000 to a population of 155,000. Last November the city recognized him by declaring a "Josh Halbert Week."

1915

Last June JAMES E. BEAR, JR., retired after teaching for thirty-one years at Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Virginia. For eighteen years Professor Bear held the chair of New Testament, and for the last thirteen years he has had the chair of Christian Missions.

1917

After twenty-three years of law practice in Hobbs, New Mexico, JOHN R. BRAND was appointed to the district bench in 1953 by Governor Mechem. He served for ten years and retired in March, 1963, when he and his family went to Europe for the summer. By November, however, Judge Brand had decided to reopen his law offices. He and Mrs. Brand boast of eleven grandchildren.

A. CARTER CRYMBLE has been chosen as the "Engineer of the Year" for 1963 by the Upper East Tennessee Society of Professional Engineers. It is an annual award. Mr. Crymble is a consultant engineer in Kingsport, Tennessee, following his retirement from Tennessee Eastman Company in 1962 and is now serving as an engineer member of the State Board of Architects and Engineers. He joined Tennessee Eastman in 1933 after previous employment as electrical engineer with General Electric Company and the operation of an electrical contracting business in Bristol. Mr. Crymble is a Fellow and Life member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers. He is active in many civic projects and has been a member of the Tri-City Airport Commission since 1953, being chairman from 1955 to 1962.

GEORGE S. MUELLER retired from Bell Telephone Company in 1959, and after an illness he has been recuperating in Montvale, Virginia. Mr. Mueller is a part-time farmer and part-time teacher, and he recently received his collegiate certificate.

HARRY P. BURNS is still hard at work in the textile business in Atlanta, Georgia. Nevertheless, he finds time to do considerable traveling, especially in the Orient.

WILLIAM E. JOHNSTON, who was for forty-one years in the sugar business, was honored recently at a retirement dinner at the Fontainebleau Motor Hotel in New Orleans. He retired as director of sales for the American Sugar Company's southern district. Bill has been active in civic organizations including the Boston Club and International House.

FRED D. TOWNSEND has practiced law in Columbia, South Carolina, continuously since 1921. He is senior partner with his son, WILLIAM HOWARD TOWNSEND, '50, in the firm of Townsend & Townsend.

E. B. BEATTY, a judge of the 23rd Judicial District of Kentucky, has been awarded the outstanding citizen award for the year 1963 by the Kiwanis Club of Beatty-up-to-date report and present color slides of the University.

The meeting was arranged by William H. Hillier who was named president for the coming year.

A motion was made by the officers to begin negotiations in the realm of admissions and to make an effort to get a University representative from the Admissions Office to visit Chicago in the spring or early fall of 1964.

ST. LOUIS

■ MEMBERS OF THE St. Louis Chapter, their wives, and guests joined for a delicious buffet dinner at the new Sheraton Motor Inn in St. Louis on Thursday, February 27th. The arrangements were handled by Burr Miller, '49, and he presided over the meeting.

In the business session Miller gave a report on the chapter activities and advised that a committee had been appointed to decide upon the spring program which would include either an informal dance or a picnic. Plans were also discussed for the publication of a chapter directory.

Executive Secretary Bill Washburn was present at the meeting and made a brief report on the University. His remarks were accompanied by color slides of the campus.

TULSA

■ AN ENTHUSIASTIC gathering of alumni, their wives, and guests took place at the Tulsa Club on Monday evening, March 2nd. After a social hour an elaborate banquet was served. Presiding over the dinner was chapter president, Eric Hubert, '51.

The guest speaker was Bill Washburn, executive secretary of the Alumni Association. Bill gave a short report on the University and presented color slides with his remarks. Expression was made on behalf of the chapter for another meeting in the fall, at which time it is hoped that someone from the Admissions Office will be present.

KANSAS CITY

■ THE UNIVERSITY Club in Kansas City was the setting for a chapter meeting on Friday, February 28. A large group of alumni, their wives, and guests were present to hear a brief report of the University by executive secretary Bill Washburn who presented a series of color slides. The meeting, one of the firsts in several years, was enthusiastically received.

James Sunderland, '50, presided over the banquet and introduced Bill Washburn. Plans were discussed for a future meeting in the fall with perhaps the Dean of Admissions as guest from the University.

OKLAHOMA CITY

■ A SPLENDID turnout of the alumni in Oklahoma City took place at a luncheon on Tuesday, March 3, at The Beacon Club. It was the first time that Bill Washburn, the alumni executive secretary, had visited in Oklahoma City and a warm welcome was given him.

In addition to his brief remarks on the recent developments at the University, he presented a series of beautiful color slides of the new buildings on campus. Millar B. White, Jr., '51, made the arrangements and presided over the meeting. Plans were discussed for another meeting, perhaps with the Tulsa alumni, in the early part of the fall.
