W&L Receives $2.75 Million From Tucker Estate

Washington and Lee has received a $2.75 million bequest from the estate of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Tucker jr.

Tucker, a 1910 graduate of the University, died May 22, 1984. His wife, Hortense Rigby Tucker, died Jan. 16, 1984.

To honor the bequest, the University has designated the faculty library in the School of Law the Hortense Rigby and John H. Tucker jr. Faculty Law Library.

In addition, the Tuckers' names have been inscribed on the Benefactors' Wall in Washington Hall, where donors who have made gifts of $1 million or more to the University are recognized. Robert Parker Doremus was Washington and Lee's first million-dollar donor. With the addition of the Tuckers' gift, 17 such benefactions have now been made to the University.

"Mr. and Mrs. Tucker's lifelong devotion to Washington and Lee and their abiding interest in education will be permanently memorialized through their magnificent gift," President John D. Wilson said of the bequest. "We are grateful beyond measure for their lives and for the benefit their bequest will bring for future generations of students and teachers."

Tucker was born Feb. 25, 1891, in Pine Bluff, Ark. At Washington and Lee he was a member of the Albert Sidney Boat Club, the Student Committee, and Sigma Nu. He received the bachelor of arts degree from the University.

He served with the U.S. Army on the Mexican border in 1916 and served during World War I as aide-de-camp to Gen. W.P. Richardson in France and northern Russia. He was recalled to service in World War II, when he earned the mark of colonel. He retired from the Army in 1951.

After receiving his law degree from Louisiana State University in 1920, he began practicing law with the firm of Smitherman and Tucker. At the time of his death he was the senior partner of Tucker, Jeter & Jackson in Shreveport.

Tucker married Hortense Rigby, a native of Mansfield, Ohio, in 1924.

One of Tucker's greatest contributions was founding the Louisiana State Law Institute in 1938. The institute made possible modernization of the state's civil code and served as a model for law reform throughout the United States. It worked to modernize civil procedure and codify criminal law.

Tucker served as president of the institute from its founding until 1965 when he became its first chairman. At the time of his death he had been named "Animateur" of the institute, an office that had been designed specifically for him. T. Haller Jackson Jr., '48, president of the institute and one of Tucker's law partners, explained that the French term referred to "a person who animates an enterprise or an organization by his ardor and his spirit."

Tucker was also known for a variety of other contributions to the law, including several important cases he handled. He was considered one of the world's authorities on the Napoleonic Code, the body of French civil law enacted in 1804, which was a model for the civil codes of many countries.

He was a member of the Supreme Court Committee on Professional Ethics and Grievances from 1934 to 1937. He was the author of Source Books of Louisiana Law. He addressed many groups and was a visiting lecturer at Tulane University from 1959 through 1961.

He served on numerous civic boards in Shreveport and was a trustee of the First Presbyterian Church of Shreveport. He was a member of Omicron Delta Kappa, the Order of the Coif, Phi Beta Kappa, and Phi Delta Phi.

Tucker was awarded an honorary doctor of laws degree from Washington and Lee in 1958. He also received honorary degrees from Louisiana State University, Tulane University, Loyola University, and Centenary College of Louisiana. He was awarded the French Legion of Honor in 1956. He received the Hatton W. Sumners Award in 1958 for outstanding service.

On the occasion of his 80th birthday, the annual Tucker Civil Law Lecture was established in his honor at the Louisiana State University law school.

During memorial exercises for Tucker in the Supreme Court of Louisiana, Haller Jackson said of his colleague: "Col. Tucker's participation in the (Louisiana State Law) Institute and its work was prompted by his desire to improve and modernize the civil law of Louisiana. His ambitions were supported by a foundation of religious faith, unshakeable integrity, inquisitiveness, scholarship, perseverance, physical energy, all illuminated by an unusual intellect and perception."

Jackson continued: "Out of his inquisitiveness came his use and love of books and a resulting scholarship that contributed to the success of the institute. . . . When he began the practice of law, he began collecting a personal law library which (came to be) recognized as one of the finest private collections in the United States. He was not a mere book collector. He was a serious scholar of the law, he loved his civil law library, and he used it almost daily."

Tucker donated his personal library, which came to number some 12,000 volumes, to the law school at Louisiana State University, where it is designated the Tucker Civil Law Collection.

Another of Tucker's partners, Robert McLean Jeter, '41, noted that the naming of Washington and Lee's law faculty library in the Tuckers' honor was a particularly appropriate memorial. "I am certain that Mr. and Mrs. Tucker would be gratified and complimented by this action on the part of the University," said Jeter. "Mr. Tucker was extremely interested in books and the development of libraries. . . . The dedication of the law school faculty library is a fitting tribute to their memory."

A Nobel Prize

Dr. Joseph Goldstein, '63, Honored For Medical Research

by Jeffery G. Hanna

DALLAS—A late afternoon rainstorm was poised on the Dallas horizon by the time Dr. Joseph L. Goldstein, '62, appeared in the doorway of the auditorium at the University of Texas Health Science Center.

Goldstein had barely set foot in the room when the army of photographers spotted him and began snapping and flashing away, creating a dazzling display of man-made lightning.

Moments later Goldstein's colleague, Dr. Michael Brown, entered the room, and the firestorm of flashes intensified. The photographers pressed forward, and Goldstein and Brown retreated to the steps leading to the stage.

As the two doctors stood there, patiently posing and steadfastly smiling for the photographers, the audience of about 500—an odd assortment of media and medical students, doctors and medical school professors—rose together to applaud.

It had been more than 11 hours since the phone had rung shortly before 7 a.m. in Goldstein's Boston hotel room. Half a world away the Nobel Assembly at Stockholm's Karolinska Institute had announced that the 1985 Nobel Prize for Medicine had been awarded to Goldstein and Brown for their revolutionary research on the role of cholesterol in heart disease—research that has allowed scientists to understand what Goldstein describes as “the mechanism through which diet and exercise can help prevent a heart attack.”

When the Nobel Assembly's decision was announced, the two doctors were attending a conference at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Fittingly, their research had provided the keynote speech for that conference the night before. Back in front of the same audience the next morning, they uncorked champagne and held a news conference with the Boston media before hurrying to the airport to board a plane back home to Dallas and the University of Texas Health Science Center where they had made the first in their series of remarkable discoveries 13 years ago.

Now they were seated side by side on the stage, listening to a series of speakers—from the medical center's president to the mayor of Dallas—heap praise upon them and their work.

Once those preliminaries were over, Goldstein and Brown stepped to the lectern and received another standing ovation.

A beaming Goldstein began: “I'd like to say that I think Dallas is known to the outside world for the Dallas Cowboys, Neiman Marcus, and the television program Dallas. And I think now we should add the University of Texas Health Science Center at Dallas.”

Then Brown and Goldstein took turns at the microphone. They shared credit with their colleagues. They explained how they had managed to work together so productively and harmoniously. And they tried to sum up 13 years of landmark research in five minutes while using language laymen might comprehend.

When the formal news conference ended, Goldstein was cornered by reporters and asked to recreate his initial reaction to the early morning telephone call.

“It was,” he said, “exciting and thrilling and very surprising.”

Exciting and thrilling? Certainly. Surprising?

“The only really surprising part,” says Daniel Markstein III, '63, who roomed with Goldstein at Washington and Lee, “was that it took the Nobel Committee so long to confirm what all of us have known for about 25 years.”

When Joseph Leonard Goldstein of Kingstree, S.C., applied for admission to Washington and Lee in 1958, one of his references, John F. McFadden, '36, concluded a glowing letter of recommendation with this prophetic pronouncement:

“I, personally, feel that this young man will someday be a credit to Washington and Lee if he is admitted.”

Twenty-seven years later that prediction, accurate though it might be, seems a woefully inadequate way to describe

Washington and Lee's first Nobel laureate. To be sure, Goldstein immediately assumes a special place in the University's history. And yet, it seems clear that he had already occupied a fairly prominent place long before the Nobel Committee recognized the Goldstein-Brown collaboration this October.

Consider this thumbnail sketch of Goldstein's W&L career: he compiled a perfect 4.0 average as a premed student and was the valedictorian of his class; he was Phi Beta Kappa, Omicron Delta Kappa, Who's Who, and Phi Eta Sigma; he was a member of Alpha Epsilon Delta, secretary of the Publications Board, secretary of the Zeta Beta Tau social fraternity, and secretary-treasurer of the Student Library Committee; he won the freshman chemistry award and the Phi Beta Kappa sophomore award; he was editor-in-chief of The Calyx.

Perhaps that explains why so many of his W&L professors and classmates, like Markstein, have not been terribly surprised by Goldstein's success.

"I had no inkling that a former student of ours was about to win a Nobel Prize," says James Starling, retired former head of the department of biology. "But when it did happen, it didn't surprise me in the least that it was Joe."

Adds Edward Holmes, '63, himself a professor of medicine at Duke University and one who has kept abreast of the work of Goldstein and Brown: "I think it is fairly easy to say that Joe had the potential even back then [as an undergraduate] to do something special. I haven't been surprised at anything that he has accomplished. As someone else has suggested, Joe's synapses open and close faster than those of most other people."

In the immediate aftermath of the Nobel announcement, stories of Goldstein's undergraduate days were making the rounds—the time he got a 99 on an organic chemistry test and the next highest grade was 66, for instance; the way he juggled a full schedule of academic and extracurricular responsibilities and still managed to organize a nightly bridge game, for another; the fact that the only B on his transcript came in a physical education class, which did not count in his grade-point average.

All the stories and all the storytellers are consistent in the picture they paint of a student who clearly excelled in the demanding premedical regimen but still managed to take full advantage of everything a college education offered.

"The one impression that I want to convey about Joe Goldstein," says Markstein, "is that here is a fellow who is obviously very gifted, but he is certainly not a one-dimensional person. He enjoyed the arts. He enjoyed good food, good wine, and good times. It really is a great delight to see someone like that succeed the way he has."

Goldstein addresses Dallas news conference.

By today's standards, Goldstein's ability to participate in so many diverse activities and still make straight A's as a premed student would be rare, indeed. And yet, measured against the premed students of his era, it is clear that Goldstein was more the rule than the exception.

"I don't know how it is for premed students there now," says Holmes. "But when we were in school at W&L, most of the premed students were involved in a number of other activities. The difference in Joe's case was not that he was involved in so many things, but that he did them all so much better than anybody else."

Adds Markstein: "The most remarkable thing about Joe was his ability to organize, whether it was his work on the Calyx or preparation for an examination. He was always able to order his obligations and his time so that he was able to complete his tasks efficiently, get enormously well-prepared, and leave a lot of time for the things he really enjoyed—playing duplicate bridge in Buena Vista, for instance, or the nightly midnight bridge games that he held in his apartment."

The diversity of his interests and his talents, say Goldstein's professors, was not limited to his extracurricular activities, either. He took numerous liberal arts courses and was as successful in those as he was in the laboratories. Naturally, that is a particular source of pride to professors who are dedicated to the value of a liberal arts background.

"You must remember that in those days the curriculum was different from what it is now in that there were more general education courses required," says William J. Watt, professor of chemistry. "One of the ideas that was current at that time was that premed students ought to be given the broadest possible curriculum. It is an idea that is coming back into vogue now."

One of Watt's colleagues in the chemistry department, Keith Shillington, seconds the notion that a liberal arts background is a vital component in a solid premed preparation: "The imagination is trained in a great many ways and not necessarily in the ways you're ultimately going to use it. You may well train your imagination in some other way completely, but the ideas ooze over."

Those ideas that trigger the imagination of a premed student can, Shillington would argue, ooze from such an unlikely source as, say, Victorian poetry. Sidney M. B. Coulling, the S. Blount Mason Professor of English, remembers having Goldstein in just such a class.

"It was the spring semester of his junior year," says Coulling, "and I have looked back in my records to find that his work all across the board was A work. This was an upper division course in Victorian poetry, and I think we ought to keep in mind that there was no pass/fail option in those days. He took the course for credit and was competing with senior English majors on a graded basis.

“There was no challenge that was too great for Joe. He was a serious-minded student, but he was not a pedant. He was not a person who isolated himself. He was a good all-around student.”

Shillington, who has taught premed students organic chemistry for more than 30 years, remembers Goldstein as “very bright and intense.”

Adds Markstein: “He was always not obviously competitive, but he was bound and determined that nobody was going to be ahead of him. Particularly did that trait manifest itself in organic chemistry.”

Other of Goldstein’s professors and classmates have similar stories to tell about his undergraduate career. One of those stories has particular meaning to the Nobel Prize, though. It is told by L. Randlett Emmons, professor of biology.

“Joe Goldstein’s last year here as a student was my first year,” recalls Emmons. “In the fall of that year Scientific American devoted an entire issue to reporting new research that had been conducted about the cell.

“Not long after that magazine came out, Joe and Herb Salomon, a classmate and close friend, appeared in my office one day and asked whether I would be willing to sit down with the two of them once a week and discuss the material that had been in that article. So we arranged a special seminar, just the three of us. Something like that has never happened to me since, two students asking for such a class.

“Joe was extraordinary. I was just out of graduate school myself, so I tended to look upon him and Herb more as peers than as an old professor looking down on these young kids. Joe made a profound impression on me and has been on the tip of my tongue in the 25 years since he left here since I am constantly using him as an example of the ‘good old days.’ I know they were excited down in Dallas when the Nobel was announced, but they wouldn’t have been much more thrilled than I was or we were.”

Joe Goldstein remembers that his interest in the University was initiated by “a friend who had relatives who had gone to Washington and Lee.”

“I was interested in premed, and the premed program was pretty strong, so I interviewed there and thought it was a good place to go.”

Looking back on his undergraduate career from the heights of a Nobel Prize in Medicine, Goldstein finds that his memories of the courses he took in English and history and economics and French and German are as vivid as his memories of the strictly premed courses.

“There are a lot of people that I remember as being outstanding in the liberal arts at Washington and Lee. Three who come to mind most quickly are professors Coulling in English, (William) Jenks in history, and (Charles) Phillips in economics,” Goldstein said in an interview following the Nobel Prize announcement.

“I probably took as many of the traditional liberal arts courses as I did premed courses. They were especially stimulating. Had I gone to another institution that was not oriented so strongly toward the liberal arts, I think I probably still would have tended to take such courses. I think it is very important to have a blend. Premedical students should, I think, have as liberal an education as possible.”

It is interesting to note that the 1962 Calyx, the edition that Goldstein edited, was dedicated to Coulling and Phillips and that the dedication begins: “Just as the Washington and Lee Swing has represented the progressive course that our University has pursued during the past few years, so have two of the younger members of the Faculty become symbolic of this pervading attitude.”

As for the premed curriculum, Goldstein recognizes how much different it was in comparison with the kind of courses that are included now.

“In those days biochemistry wasn’t taught, and there was not a lot in genetics,” he said. “There were the traditional courses in organic and inorganic chemistry, and I remember those as being very solid. Today things are so different. We have high school students working in our laboratories during the summers.”

By contrast, Goldstein did not participate in research during his undergraduate days. “Those opportunities simply were not available at that time,” he said.

In fact, the Robert E. Lee Undergraduate Research Program at W&L began a year after Goldstein graduated.

Like most others, Goldstein does not remember that the diversity of his extracurricular life as an undergraduate was particularly unusual.

"I would say that a lot of people were extremely active," he said. "Most of the bright students were active. Perhaps that is because the competition to get into medical school then was not as fierce as it is now. I'm not sure."

By the time he was a senior, Goldstein had begun looking toward medical school and was headed to St. Louis and Washington University. Then, during the spring vacation of his senior year, he accompanied classmate Herb Salomon to Dallas, Salomon's hometown.

"Herb Salomon was already going to attend Southwestern Medical School in Dallas, and he got me interviews while I was visiting during the spring vacation," recalled Goldstein. "I liked the city, and the school seemed to be going places. I thought there would be some good opportunities here."

Little did he—or the people at Southwestern Medical School—realize just how fully he would take advantage of those opportunities.

Once in Dallas, it didn't take Goldstein long to catch the attention of the professors at the Southwestern Medical School. The day after the Nobel Prize was announced, the Dallas Morning News quoted one of Goldstein's former medical school professors, Dr. Leonard Madison, as saying: "We always thought Joe was something super special. There's Joe Goldstein, and then there's nobody, and then there's nobody, and then there's nobody, and then there's the second one (in the class). He was just head and shoulders above everybody else. He has a spectacular mind."

But the officials at Southwestern were, understandably, a bit puzzled by Goldstein's presence in their midst. Here, after all, was a South Carolinian who had attended college in Virginia and was coming to Texas for medical school.

"He was an anomaly in that respect," said Dr. Donald Seldin, chairman of the department of internal medicine at what has since become the University of Texas Health Science Center at Dallas (UTHSCD). "Almost all of our students come from Texas. It's very unusual for us to get someone with his background. I recall that he had a very close friend (Salomon) who was here."

Like Madison, Seldin recalls Goldstein as a remarkably strong medical school student. "Whether this reflected his innate ability or his undergraduate training, I couldn't tell you," said Seldin. "I would imagine that he must have had good undergraduate training, but I must say, too, that he is truly a gifted intellect."

Goldstein finished first in his class at Southwestern and won the "Ho Din," an award given to the Southwestern Medical School graduate in recognition of both scholarly achievement and the "quality of human understanding."

From Dallas, he went to Massachusetts General in Boston for his internship. There, he met a fellow intern named Michael Brown, who had received both his undergraduate and medical training at the University of Pennsylvania.

"I, along with many others, had never heard of the Southwestern Medical School," recalled Brown during the news conference. "So when I ran into [Goldstein], I had no way of assessing him. Usually, these interns at Mass General are very highly selected, and it surprised me that anyone from a place called Southwestern Medical School had been accepted into this internship.

"But then I met him, and he turned out to be the best in-tern of that group, and we became good friends and have been friends ever since."

After their internships, Brown and Goldstein went to the National Institutes of Health—Brown as clinical associate in the Digestive and Hereditary Disease Branch; Goldstein as clinical associate in the Laboratory of Biochemical Genetics of the National Heart Institute. It was while they were working in different laboratories at the NIH that the two doctors began to develop a shared interest in the way genetic defects cause biochemical abnormalities that make people sick.

Two years later in 1970 Goldstein left the NIH for the University of Washington medical school in Seattle as a special NIH fellow in the division of medical genetics. There, he studied classical genetics and also conducted a study of heart attack victims in the Seattle area. He discovered that 31 percent of the survivors of heart attacks had either high cholesterol or high triglyceride levels or both and that 4 percent suffered from familial hypercholesterolemia (FH), a genetic disorder that causes abnormally high levels of cholesterol to develop early in a person's life.

In 1972, Goldstein returned to Southwestern Medical School as head of the department of medical genetics and was reunited with Brown, who had joined the Dallas institution a year earlier as a research fellow in gastroenterology.

It was in those Dallas laboratories that Goldstein and Brown teamed up to conduct research that has been called "elegant" by many of their colleagues in the scientific world. "What that means," explains Robert Fenley, director of medical information at UTHSCD, "is that they went at something in a wise, intelligent way, and expended the least amount of energy getting there."

Their work began as an investigation of severe familial hypercholesterolemia. They compared cultures of skin cells from victims of the disease with those of cells from healthy people.

The first in what Brown has described as "a series of adventures" came in the winter of 1972. At the Nobel news conference, Goldstein recalled how the two had designed an experiment, and Brown had left to attend a meeting.

"The technician put the tubes in the counter and the next day when I came in to look at the tubes, I couldn't believe what I saw," Goldstein said. "In fact, I remember I went in to see Dr. Seldin, to show him. For a biochemist, it was one of those changes that you knew was very, very important."

What had happened was that the skin cells of a healthy person had absorbed the specially marked cholesterol that had been added while the cells from the patient suffering from FH had allowed none of the cholesterol to enter its walls.

"That was basically the beginning of what we did," said Goldstein. "Then the next series was trying to work this out. Mike and I and the same technician worked 20 hours one Sunday in a cold room. We knew we had something, but we were using someone else's scintillation counter, and it jammed. So we went to sleep that night not knowing whether we had what we wanted or we didn't have it."

That episode is also an indication of the conditions under which those early discoveries were made. As Seldin, the man who is given credit for bringing Goldstein back to the Dallas school, explained, Goldstein and Brown "started in very modest circumstances. There was no immense laboratory facility, no huge departmental commitment of funds, no great support. They forged their studies right from the start in a Working together in their Dallas laboratory in 1972, Drs. Joseph L. Goldstein, '63, and Michael Brown discovered a complex molecule that has been described variously as "gatekeeper," "door-man," and "border patrol" which acts to recognize and admit cholesterol into the body's cells.

Cholesterol has received considerable publicity in recent years—none of it positive. A waxy alcohol that is soluble in fat but not water, cholesterol is actually essential to life since it is the primary ingredient of cell membranes, steroid hormones, and bile acids. There are two main sources of cholesterol for the body: it is produced in the liver and it enters the body through fat in food. Once in the body, cholesterol is transported through the blood and lymphatic fluid in lipoproteins, a combination of fat and protein. One particular lipoprotein, LDL or low-density lipoprotein, is chiefly responsible for carrying cholesterol.

While they were studying tissue cultures of human skin cells called fibroblasts, Goldstein and Brown identified the presence of highly specific protein molecules on the surface of cells—cell-surface receptors—that recognize the LDL particles in the blood, bind to those particles, and admit them to the cells. Once in the cell, the lipoproteins are broken down and the cholesterol is freed for the cell's use.

Cholesterol becomes a problem when the receptors do not do their work adequately, either because of an inherited genetic condition in which the body has too few LDL receptors or when a person's diet contains too many saturated fats and thereby causes the liver cells to produce too few LDL receptors.

With an inadequate number of LDL receptors, cells are not able to collect the LDL particles which remain in the blood stream and collect to create a plaque on artery walls, eventually clogging the artery and causing a heart attack or a stroke.

"The first thing our work has done," explained Goldstein at the Nobel Prize news conference in October, "is identify a single molecule, one protein, that you can actually isolate in a test tube and you can clone the gene, and one knows it exists. It is that single molecule that is actually very important in determining whether one has low cholesterol levels (which would be good) or high cholesterol levels (which would be bad).

"Once one knows that one has this molecule, then one can begin to study the factors that make it go up and down, whether that is drugs, diet, hormones, any number of things. That will be the long-term practical effects of this work."

The work has already had practical effects. The most famous of those involves a young Texas girl who suffered from familial hypercholesterolemia (FH), the genetic defect in which one is born with fewer LDL receptors than normal.

Stormie Jones was six years old when she was diagnosed as suffering from the severest form of FH, which had left her arteries clogged and caused her to have two major heart attacks.

On the advice of Goldstein, Brown, and their colleagues at the University of Texas Health Science Center in Dallas, the child was given a new heart and liver in an operation conducted in Pittsburgh. Unlike Stormie's liver which was incapable because of her genetic deficiency to produce LDL receptors, the donor liver provided her with 60 to 65 percent of the necessary receptors. When the Nobel Prize was announced in October, Stormie Jones, now 8, came from her home in Cumby, Texas, to Dallas to provide a living testimony to the scientists' work.

Stormie Jones, whose blood cholesterol level was 1,200 before her new liver and medication cut it to a normal level of between 180 to 200, is a classic genetic case. But in recent writings, Brown has pointed out that "more than half of all people in Western, industrialized countries, including the United States, have levels of circulating LDL that are above the threshold at which atherosclerosis (the gradual clogging of arteries and other blood vessels with cholesterol) is accelerated."

And the cholesterol problem for most Americans is not genetic but has more to do with dietary habits.

In a lecture given not long before the Nobel Prize, Brown suggested that Stormie Jones and James Fixx, the author of best-selling books on running who died of a heart attack, suffered from the same problem—i.e., a deficiency in the number of LDL receptors.

The difference between Stormie Jones and James Fixx, Brown noted, was that the former's problem was genetic while the latter acquired the deficiency through life style and eating habits.

"The beauty of this research," says Edward Holmes, '63, a professor of medicine at Duke University, "is that it involves one of the most common hereditary diseases in the world—familial hypercholesterolemia. It is not an incidental abnormality.

"What they have done is define how a complex system works by using patients. In addition to identifying the way in which cholesterol is carried in the blood, they have opened up a brand new area of receptor biology in which we are learning how cells communicate. They are the movers and shakers in that whole field."

But it is still their study of cholesterol that has put Goldstein and Brown in the fore.

A year ago the two scientists wrote an article about their work for Scientific American. In it they endorsed as "prudent" a diet "moderately low in animal fats." But they also suggested that "therapy with drugs that increase the number of LDL receptors may turn out to be appropriate for some people who do not have FH but in whom the number of receptors is reduced by diet or other factors."

If they are shown to be effective and safe, such drugs, wrote Goldstein and Brown, "may one day make it possible for many people to have their steak and live to enjoy it too."

context which was difficult: they made rounds; they saw patients; they taught students. And at the same time, the work developed.”

As the research unfolded and began to have ever wider implications, not just to their study of FH but to the very nature of how cells work, the two scientists were dubbed “the gold dust twins”—they clearly had the Midas touch. The list of awards given for their research was as lengthy as it was impressive even before the Nobel Prize—the scientific community’s most prestigious honor and one that carries with it a gold medal, a diploma, and 1.8 million Swedish kronor (about $225,000).

As remarkable as the scope and importance of the Goldstein-Brown research is the way in which the two scientists have worked so closely and productively for the past 13 years. It is, one colleague has suggested, a synergistic relationship. “It’s like Gilbert and Sullivan, Lerner and Lowe,” Fenley, the medical information director, told a Dallas newspaper. “They precisely complement one another.”

Explained Goldstein of the relationship: “We have tremendous respect for each other’s opinion and intellect. Although we argue about how to do an experiment, whether you add a tris buffer or a phosphate buffer, those things turn out to be trivial. We made this discovery simultaneously, and it was an exciting discovery, and we’ve been sort of committed to working it out—an intellectual dessert, so to speak.”

A feature article in the Dallas Times-Herald in 1978 provided this analysis of the relationship: “Goldstein, the geneticist, is described as a walking encyclopedia, a vacuum cleaner scooping up scientific information as fast as he finds it. He’s always buzzing with ideas. Brown, the biochemist, is more focused and analytical, able to select the best way to solve a problem.”

Whenever his colleagues talk about Goldstein, they never fail to mention his dedication to his work. Holmes, the Duke medical school professor who was a year behind Goldstein at W&L, says that “by everybody’s account, Joe is the most committed scientist around. He lives and breathes his work. In addition, he brings the very highest aptitude to that. He absolutely has excelled at every point in his career.”

Goldstein (right) and research partner Michael Brown

That helps to explain why all the honors and awards that the team has received, including the Nobel Prize, have been something of a mixed blessing. Both Goldstein and Brown are, by nature, private people. The notoriety of their work has required them to be more visible in the scientific community than they probably would prefer.

“We feel an obligation to the school to use this (the Nobel Prize) for publicity purposes,” said Goldstein. “But if we were to permit it, we would literally be run to death. Everybody would like you to speak here and there. Even before this it has been difficult to maintain the intensity of our research and still deliver lectures and speeches.

This means we’ll have to say ‘No’ more often.”

Whatever the underlying source of the effectiveness that Brown and Goldstein have as a team, it is clearly the sort of collaboration that you would expect to produce Nobel Prize work.

And it’s clear that, even after they have officially received the Nobel Prize on Dec. 10 in Stockholm, the two scientists will certainly not be willing to rest on their lofty laurels.

“We’re only at the stage now where we know that a molecule called a receptor exists and controls the blood cholesterol level,” explained Goldstein. “We have been able to study the molecule in animals. We know how to make it go up and down in animals.

“The future will be to try to understand how one can regulate or make this molecule go up and down in humans with the ultimate hope that by learning more about the factors that regulate this molecule, one would be able ultimately to delay the onset of atherosclerosis or heart attack.”

Back in October as the Nobel news conference was ending and the rainstorm was beginning to dampen a darkening Dallas, someone asked Goldstein what he planned to do tomorrow, the day after the Nobel Prize had been won.

Said Goldstein: “Tomorrow should be a day like any other day. We’ll get back to the laboratory, back to what we’re doing.”

Then he paused, smiled, and added: “Actually, I suppose tomorrow will be a bit different.”

The Comet Watch

A Guide to Comet Halley's Reappearance

by Ronald L. Reese

Halley's Comet, 684, in a woodcut by Michel Wohlgemuth from the Nuremberg Chronicles, 1493. Reprinted with permission of the publisher, Walker and Company.

It was billed as the “comet of the century.” It was supposed to be the most spectacular comet seen in recorded history, a fantastic display for the naked eye. Remember Comet Kohoutek of the mid-1970s? It turned out to be spectacular, indeed—a spectacular embarrassment for the astronomical community, barely visible to the naked eye. Comets are just that way about their visual appearance—unpredictable.

Still somewhat chastened by the Kohoutek episode, astronomers are being a bit more conservative about the return of the object virtually synonymous with the very word comet—Comet Halley.

Don't get your hopes up for a repeat of the beautiful 1910 display. This time the orbits of the comet and the earth, and the timing of the comet's passage have conspired to make observation difficult in the northern hemisphere. Nonetheless, the upcoming passage of the legendary comet has provoked a plethora of books, journal articles (including this one, I suppose), newspaper accounts, trinkets, T-shirts, comet “scopes,” “comet pills,” and even comet cruises to the exotic South Pacific to get a better view.

Unfortunately for us, the best places to view the comet are in the southern hemisphere. But for those of us bound to the northern hemisphere, unable to indulge in a four-month cruise to the South Seas, the accompanying guide may help to locate the comet during its fall and winter flight through the terrestrial neighborhood of the sun.

Several factors need to be kept in mind when planning to observe the comet. Our society has become afraid of the dark. As Henry Beston said in his eloquent book The Outermost

House, “[W]ith lights and ever more lights, we drive the holiness and beauty of night back to the forests and the seas. . .” (and this was written in 1928!). As a result, it will likely take some doing for most of us to find a suitably dark location well away from the background illumination of street lights, shopping centers, and urban sprawl. Even the Washington and Lee campus is no longer free of what astronomers call “light pollution,” thanks to our new $50,000 security lights.

Moonlight is another nuisance for comet-viewing. Full moons are notorious for “bleaching out” a comet on the dome of the sky. Thus, the times near a new moon are best, for then the moon is below the horizon during most of the night.

Other words of caution: don't confuse the contrail of a jet with the comet. The comet will not zoom across the sky but partakes (along with the stars) in the slow westerly rotation of the celestial sphere due to the eastward rotation of the earth. The comet will shift westward with respect to the background stars from night to night as it moves in its orbit about the sun. Don't buy a telescope specifically to view the comet, despite all the Madison Avenue ads encouraging such a purchase for this “once-in-a-lifetime” event. By the time you can see the comet with your naked eye, the field of view of a telescope will be much too small to see the entire comet at once. A good pair of binoculars will be handy, however, because of their low magnification and wide field of view.

Readers who want to find the latest information about the comet can consult the popular monthly astronomical journal Sky and Telescope, available in most public libraries. It now features a regular update on the comet.

Guide to Observing Comet Halley and Other Objects

The best time to search for the comet is within a week of the new moon each month. The altitude angles mentioned are the elevation angles above the nearest horizon point and are specified for an observer at a latitude of about 40 degrees north (the latitude of Philadelphia and Denver). For latitudes more northerly than this, the comet will appear correspondingly lower; for latitudes south of this, the comet will appear correspondingly higher in the sky. If you are plagued by clouds and poor weather, after April 1986 the rain date for Comet Halley is 2062 A.D.

DECEMBER

(New Moon—December 12)

The comet will be observable with binoculars and perhaps with a keen naked eye. At about 6 p.m. look due south at an altitude of about 50 degrees. The comet will move with the stars to the western horizon at about 15 degrees per hour and will set about midnight in the direction west-southwest. The tail of the comet will be quite short.

While you are freezing in the dark, you might also note Jupiter, which sets at about 8:30 p.m. and will be a brilliant "star" in the southwest. With steady binoculars you should be able to see the famous four Galilean moons of Jupiter, discovered by Galileo when he first turned a telescope to the sky about 1610. These moons change their position rapidly about the planet from night to night. A second object to look for is the lovely open cluster of stars known as the Pleiades, located due south at about 10 p.m. (south-southeast before then). Through a pair of binoculars, the Pleiades form what has been called "the littlest dipper" to distinguish them from the more well-known Big and Little Dippers in the very northern sky (Ursa Major and Ursa Minor). The conspicuous winter constellation Orion will appear to the southeast.

JANUARY

(New Moon—January 10)

Probably the best chance for those of us located in the northern hemisphere to see the comet with the naked eye will occur during the first two weeks of this month. Look southwest at the end of twilight or about 6:30 p.m. The comet will be at an altitude of about 30 degrees in the constellation Aquarius. The comet sets at 9:30 on the first of the month but sets at 7:30 by Jan. 15. The tail of the comet will be short and pointing up as twilight ends. Jupiter will be low in the southwest with the Pleiades toward the south. In the early evening of Jan. 12, both Halley and Jupiter will be near the waxing crescent moon. Orion will be to the left of the Pleiades.

FEBRUARY

Throughout this month, the comet will be too close to the sun to be seen.

MARCH

(New Moon—March 10)

Prepare to get up before the birds—the comet will now be visible in the early morning. Look low in the southeast before 5 a.m. when morning twilight begins. The comet will be at only a 10-degree altitude but the tail may be longer than it was in January. By March 7, look left of the Teapot of Sagittarius. Saturn will be visible in the east-southeast above the comet and the reddish, bright star Antares in Scorpius. Mars will be below and to the east of Saturn and will be reddish in color.

APRIL

(New Moon—April 9)

Unless the tail of the comet is very long and bright, it will be difficult to see the comet this month. But if it is visible, it will again be an early morning object. Look between 2 a.m. and 4 a.m. very low in the southern sky. The head of the comet may even be below the horizon with just the tail streaming up for you to glimpse. Unobstructed southern horizons are a must, with clear skies and little ground haze. Both Saturn and Mars will again be visible. Saturn will be almost due south at an altitude of about 30 degrees with Mars to the southeast and at a lower altitude.

Theocentric Ethics

W&L Hosts Major Conference on a New Theory of Theological Ethics

by Anne Coulling

More than 180 theologians, philosophers, ministers, sociologists, and other interested individuals from throughout the United States, Canada, and abroad descended on the Washington and Lee campus in late September to discuss what is likely to be regarded as one of the most important works on theological ethics in this century.

During the three-day symposium, eminent scholars from a variety of disciplines presented their particular assessments of Ethics from a Theocentric Perspective, a two-volume work by University of Chicago theological ethicist James M. Gustafson.

According to Harlan Beckley, associate professor of religion at Washington and Lee and a principal organizer of the conference, Gustafson's proposal represents "a radical departure from the dominant theologies and ethics of our time. He calls for a reorientation of human life away from a human-centered religious and moral life to a way of life that consents to the larger purposes of God."

The topic was important; the speakers represented the very best in their respective fields. But what made the conference at least uncommon, if not unique, was that the author himself was in the audience to hear assessments of his work, which came in the form of both prepared lectures and lively discussions that followed those lectures.

One of the speakers, Robert N. Bellah, Ford Professor of Sociology and Comparative Studies at the University of California at Berkeley, put the unusual nature of the symposium in perspective when he began his lecture in the Moot Court Room of Lewis Hall by saying:

"As the sessions and days begin to accumulate, I can't help thinking what it must be like to be Jim Gustafson. On the one hand, it is an enormous honor to have so large and distinguished a group of people gathered together to discuss one's work. On the other hand, we sit in a quasi-courtroom with three spectral judges [occupying the empty judges' chairs]. Or, to switch metaphors, I cannot help but think that Jim is some kind of sacrificial victim at a high and extended academic ritual."

On the third and final day, however, Gustafson had his say. He responded to the speeches that had gone before, defending and explaining his positions on some points but also pointing to the directions theology and ethics might take after his book.

Following his formal presentation, Gustafson participated in a panel discussion that concluded in an electric moment when Paul Ramsey of Princeton University, himself a theological ethicist of note, directed a pointed and quite personal question to Gustafson—asking him, in effect, why his theology had abandoned so much that is central to the Christian tradition.

Gustafson then delivered one of the most moving sermons many in the audience had ever heard, explaining with obvious emotion what had led him to reject those traditional Christian beliefs that characterize God as serving human interests.

Said Gustafson: "I think the tradition has sold people short. It has led them to expect things in the primary language of the tradition that fail over and over again. [T]here are experiences of suffering in the world, and the traditional religious language has a way of just putting syrup over that stuff and not suffering with the suffering and not being in pain with those who are in pain."

Gustafson, for whom God's purposes are larger than fulfilling human interests, concluded: "I am not only concerned with the re-symbolization of Christianity, so that these traditional symbols can be made more meaningful. I am concerned that we recognize a certain kind of authenticity of religious sensibility and moral profundity and sensitivity [among those who do not consent to the tradition]. And [I am concerned] that at least some of us [theologians] find a way of talking to that, of nurturing that. . . and of not building barriers which are not essential, in my judgment, to the ultimate thing that life is about, which is not preserving the tradition, but is the service of God."

Rarely does a scholarly symposium attain such a moment of high drama.

It was, in part, that emotional exchange that led the symposium's final speaker, Elmer W. Johnson, a vice president of the General Motors Company and a close friend of Gustafson, to describe the proceedings as "the most exhilarating, intellectual stretching symposium I have ever attended. . ."

Certainly the dramatic conclusion was a high point. But it was the combination of the symposium's format and the quality of the speakers that led so many of the participants to praise it as one of the most meaningful events they had ever attended.

Beckley had conceived of such a conference three years earlier while he was on sabbatical leave at the University of Chicago.

"The first volume of Ethics from a Theocentric Perspective had just been published when I was at Chicago," said Beckley, "and it seemed to me that this was the first comprehensive work in theological ethics by a mature scholar since Reinhold Niebuhr's The Nature and Destiny of Man in the mid-1940s. Since this is the sort of work that comes along only every fourth decade or so and has the potential for lasting significance, it clearly requires careful scrutiny."

Gustafson's work is so sweeping in scope that it touches several other disciplines. Consequently, Beckley designed the conference to be interdisciplinary in nature, incorporating the fields of ethics, theology, philosophy of religion, philosophy of science, and sociology.

"We wanted to bring representatives of these fields together to get their perspectives," said Beckley. "But we also wanted to use Gustafson's book as a 'benchmark' or base from which scholars could study and discuss the entire subject of theological ethics."

The speakers were all leading scholars in their respective fields. In addition to Bellah and Johnson, papers were presented by Robert Audi, professor of philosophy at the University of Nebraska; Edward Farley, professor of theology at Vanderbilt University Divinity School; Robert O. Johann, chairman of the department of philosophy at Fordham University; Gordon O. Kaufman, professor of theology at the Harvard University Divinity School; Mary Midgley, retired senior lecturer in philosophy at the University of Newcastle in Great Britain; John P. Reeder Jr., chairman of the department of religious studies at Brown University; and John Howard Yoder, who teaches theology and ethics at the University of Notre Dame.

Much of the funding for the symposium was provided by the Philip Fullerton Howerton Fund for Special Programs in the Department of Religion. The Howerton Fund was established in 1973 by Mrs. Philip Howerton in memory of her late husband.

The conference was co-sponsored by The Institute for the Advanced Study of Religion at the University of Chicago Divinity School.

"The project was a major success from every standpoint," said Beckley. "Important people in ethics and theology came to Lexington to talk with each other about an important book, and I think they left not only with a positive experience about the conference but, we hope, with some appreciation for Washington and Lee as a place where an event such as this can be undertaken with considerable success."

Beckley and Charles M. Swezey, '57, a professor of ethics at Union Theological Seminary in Richmond, are currently involved in negotiations to have the papers from the symposium published.

Gustafson presents his response.

Cognitive Studies

Interdisciplinary Program Takes a Fresh Look at an Ancient Subject

by Brian D. Shaw

What do Plato, a rat's hippocampus, and a depressed college student have in common?

In addition to being matters of current scholarly interest and research at Washington and Lee, the three diverse topics represent aspects of one of the oldest subjects of liberal learning—how the mind processes information.

Washington and Lee is in the midst of formulating plans to establish a formal program to study that ancient subject, which today goes by the name "cognitive studies"—a field that John W. Elrod, dean of the College (of arts and sciences), calls one of the most exciting and promising new areas of instruction in undergraduate education.

As a specific area of study, cognitive studies is devoted to analysis of the nature of the mind and knowledge. It draws from a variety of disciplines such as computer science, psychology, philosophy, linguistics, and neuroscience. Scholars in those fields examine the nature of perception, thought, language, meaning, learning, memory, and other mental phenomena.

They confront the venerable questions raised by philosophers by using the contemporary research techniques of artificial intelligence, neuroscience, and cognitive psychology, as well as the modern modes of analysis used in philosophy and linguistics.

The major emphasis at Washington and Lee will be in the departments of psychology, computer science, and philosophy. Professors David Elmes of the psychology department and Ramsey Martin of the philosophy department wrote the report on the prospects of Washington and Lee's cognitive studies program.

A faculty steering committee has been formed to plan and implement the cognitive studies program. Its members are Elmes, Leonard Jarrard, Joseph Thompson, and Nancy Margand of the psychology department; Martin and Harrison Pemberton of the philosophy department; and Kenneth Lambert of the computer science department.

The steering committee hopes to propose a course of study for the program that will be approved for inclusion in the 1986-87 Washington and Lee catalogue. Funds for the development of the program will come from a $250,000 Andrew W. Mellon Foundation grant received by W&L this summer. As previously announced, the grant funds will also be used to strengthen Washington and Lee's East Asian Studies program.

In the proposal for a program in cognitive studies, Elmes and Martin explain that "the field of cognitive studies grew out of the marriage between computer science and the more traditional disciplines of psychology and linguistics that held to a view of the mind as an active processor of information."

Cognitive studies, they say, is in keeping with the University's philosophy—as stated in the catalogue—to "strive to extend (the students') range of knowledge and human understanding beyond the limits of their specialty. What better way to strive to that purpose," ask Elmes and Martin, "than to foster a broad-ranged inquiry into cognition, a fascinating and important aspect of knowledge and human understanding?"

The cognitive studies program will also benefit the faculty, Elmes and Martin say, because the multi-disciplinary nature of the program will provide a framework under which faculty members can "gather together in shared interest, and we can expect them to benefit intellectually and in their teaching as a result."

Under the umbrella of cognitive studies, for instance, Jarrard's continuing research into the function of the hippocampus—a primitive brain structure implicated in memory function—could be related to Elmes' research into the effect of moods on student study habits or to Pemberton's studies of Plato's dialogues.

In addition to the obvious intellectual benefits of the program, cognitive studies carries a practical application. "The 'life of the mind' serves as a metaphor for liberal learning," the two professors say, "but just as important, the life of the mind governs our mundane affairs.

"Disorders of language, memory, or reading are devastating because they can disrupt leisure and work as well as intellectual pursuits. Many aspects of cognitive studies address such problems, and many students of a practical bent, such as budding clinical psychologists and premedical students, find them of particular interest."

Another area in which cognitive studies will have practical application is artificial intelligence. Elmes and Martin say "expert systems"—such as MYCIN, the computer program that assists physicians in diagnosing diseases—are a facet of artificial intelligence that represent "an important contribution to society. These applications of cognitive science have worked in a synergistic way with basic cognitive studies."

The importance of the new field was underscored recently in an article in The Chronicle of Higher Education in which psychologist Robert Perloff wrote: "One area that has turned departments of psychology around 180 degrees is cognitive science and artificial intelligence. Cognitive science has put the mind and head back into the legitimate purview of psychology: How do we analyze problems? Which solutions are effective? Which are ineffective? That has tremendous implications for how children learn, how to prepare textbooks, how to correct learning disabilities."

At the outset, the cognitive studies program will be made up of relevant courses that are currently available to students. The departments of psychology, computer science, classics, and perhaps sociology/anthropology will identify the cognitive studies courses in both the lower and upper levels. The first year will be "one of natural evolution, both deliberate and resulting from the mixing of disparate interests," Elmes and Martin say.

Beginning in the 1986-87 academic year, students will be able to construct an independent major in cognitive studies, although no formal department or major requirements will be made. Growth and development in cognitive studies will be predicated upon interest shown by both students and faculty.

With the founding of the program in cognitive studies, Washington and Lee will join such institutions as Brandeis, Brown, Hampshire, MIT, Rochester, Vassar, Wellesley, Gustavus Adolphus, and Tulane that have either formal or coordinate undergraduate majors in the field.

"Ultimately," say Elmes and Martin, "the goal may be a major program in cognitive studies, but in the meantime we see cognitive studies serving as a medium for attracting students and faculty interested in studying the mind."

A Message From the Rector

To Alumni, Parents, members of the business community, and other friends and supporters of Washington and Lee University:

Each year we include our annual report of gifts in this issue of the Alumni Magazine. This year it is my privilege as the Rector of the Board of Trustees to express to each of you our heartfelt thanks for the generous support we received this past year. We thank you also for your continuing commitment to helping Washington and Lee as it makes further progress in its achievement of excellence.

To me and to your Board of Trustees it is particularly noteworthy that our total gifts for the past year 1984-85 were the highest since the completion of the Development Program in 1982. As you will note elsewhere in this report, our total gift support amounted to $7.8 million, just under the $7.82 million achieved in 1981-82 when we ended the Development Program. The total gift support from alumni added up to $3.74 million, also the highest total received since the end of the Development Program.

We must always remind ourselves that philanthropy has maintained this sixth-oldest institution of higher learning in the United States for nearly a quarter of a millennium, all in accordance with what we might call a basic plan to which George Washington himself subscribed and which Robert E. Lee strengthened by the gifts he developed as a result of the fact that so many in both North and South held him in such high esteem.

Even as we express our gratitude, we must be reminded of our need to do more. Each generation has been the beneficiary of those who came before, and each generation is obligated to pay its dues. While we can take pride in our accomplishment, we must strive to do more to further the influence of this great institution that has meant so much to us and can mean even more to those who follow after us at Washington and Lee.

Sincerely,

The Robert E. Lee Associates

The Board of Trustees established the Robert E. Lee Associates in 1967 to identify and recognize leadership in support of the University's educational program through the Annual Fund. Alumni and friends are cordially invited to join this fellowship.

Qualification for membership: An alumnus, parent, or friend may join the Robert E. Lee Associates by contributing $1,000 or more to the University through its Annual Fund for support of current operations in the educational and general budget. This gift may be paid in one or more installments during the fiscal year—July 1 to June 30.

General's Council: A Lee Associate becomes a member of the General's Council for cumulative gifts totaling $10,000 or more in 12 consecutive years or less, or for a pledge to accomplish this result. Thus, a donor may fulfill this requirement by giving—or pledging to give—$1,000 in any 10 years out of 12, by making larger gifts at less frequent intervals, or by a single gift of $10,000 or more.

Listed are members of the General's Council and those Lee Associates who made a gift to the Annual Fund of $1,000 or more during 1984-85.

The Annual Fund: Academic Classes

The Annual Fund is Washington and Lee's most vital source of gift income. Listed here are the names of alumni who contributed to the Annual Fund in 1984-85. Their gifts helped Washington and Lee continue the high quality of its educational program. Those whose names are printed in bold face type are members of the Lee Associates and made gifts of $1,000 or more in 1984-85; those whose names are in italics are Colonnade Club members and made gifts of $100-$999 in 1984-85.

The Annual Fund: Parents

Gifts by parents are especially significant because they represent a generous "extra" investment in the quality of education offered by Washington and Lee. The University is especially grateful for this demonstration of confidence. Listed here are the names of parents who contributed to the Annual Fund in 1984-85. Those whose names are printed in bold face type are members of the Lee Associates and made gifts of $1,000 or more in 1984-85; those whose names are in italics are members of the Colonnade Club and made gifts of $100-$999 in 1984-85.

The Annual Fund: Friends

Washington and Lee is deeply grateful for the gifts received in support of current operations from persons who are neither alumni nor parents. Most of the gifts from these "friends" are unrestricted and are given in the form of direct grants or in the form of memorials. Those whose names are printed in bold face type are members of the Lee Associates and made gifts of $1,000 or more in 1984-85; those whose names are in italics are members of the Colonnade Club and made gifts of $100-$999 in 1984-85.

Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges

A record $2,758,707 was contributed by business and industry to 14 private Virginia colleges through the VFIC during 1984-85. Washington and Lee's share was $210,624. This magnificent total was beneficially influenced by a $100,000 challenge offered by Ethyl Corporation of Richmond, Virginia. The challenge was fully met.

Under the direction of a board that includes 40 business leaders and the presidents of the 14 independent colleges, the VFIC enlisted nearly 1,000 supporters, primarily corporations doing business in Virginia who are concerned with strengthening private higher education. Because of space limitations, the full listing of donor sources published annually in the VFIC annual report is not repeated here. Washington and Lee acknowledges with gratitude the concern and leadership of the companies, foundations and individuals who made generous contributions for private higher education through the VFIC.

Business and Industry

Washington and Lee University was assisted in large measure during 1984-85 by direct grants for current expenditures from corporations in addition to corporate assistance received through the Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges (VFIC). Investments by private business in private education take on special meaning and importance. The total of these gifts during the 1984-85 year was $48,449.

6 Anonymous Gifts

Irrevocable Deferred Gifts and Estate Plans

The following persons have either created an irrevocable deferred gift on behalf of Washington and Lee or have informed the Trustees that they have included the University in their wills or estate plans.

Irrevocable deferred gifts are charitable arrangements whereby income is retained for the lifetime of the donor and/or his or her beneficiaries. An income tax deduction is available at the time the deferred gift is created even though the principal does not pass to Washington and Lee until the death of the donor or beneficiaries.

Also included are planned gifts to Washington and Lee which use life insurance as the financial arrangement.

Mrs. Holton, Ogilvie Elected Trustees

Washington and Lee University has announced the election of two new members to its Board of Trustees.

Virginia Rogers Holton of McLean, Va., and W. Buckner Ogilvie of Houston, Texas, were elected to six-year terms on the Board, effective January 1, 1986.

The elections came during the fall meeting of the Trustees held on the campus October 25-26.

Mrs. Holton is a native of Roanoke who received her bachelor's degree from Wellesley College. She attended the School of Language at Middlebury College and the Latin American Secretarial School in New York City.

She worked for the State Department at the American Embassy in Brussels for two years and later served as an intelligence analyst for the Central Intelligence Agency.

In 1953, she married Linwood Holton, a 1944 Washington and Lee graduate and former Roanoke lawyer who was governor of Virginia from 1970 through 1974.

During her years as Virginia's First Lady, Mrs. Holton was involved in the Right to Read program sponsored by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. In 1974 she was appointed to the steering committee of the first Governor's Conference on Reading. She also initiated and chaired the statewide Governor's Conference on the Family Food Dollar.

From 1974 to 1982 she was a member of the University of Virginia's board of visitors, chairing the board's academic affairs committee. She is vice chairman of the Conserve Virginia Campaign of the Nature Conservancy and is on the board of directors of the Virginia Environmental Endowment. She is also a member of the board of the University of Virginia Medical School Fund.

Mrs. Holton has a keen interest in the fine arts and has been a member of the Northern Virginia Panel of the Virginia Commission for the Arts. She has recently been president and chairman of the board of the McLean Orchestra.

The Holtons are the parents of four children and currently live in McLean.

Ogilvie, a 1964 graduate of Washington and Lee, was elected to the trusteeship by a vote of the Washington and Lee alumni. He is executive vice president of Excalibur Computer Systems Inc. He holds a master of science degree from Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

At Washington and Lee, he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa and Omicron Delta Kappa, the national leadership fraternity. He was also co-captain of the varsity football team and active in the student government.

Ogilvie has served as a member of Washington and Lee's Alumni Board of Directors and has been vice chairman of the Annual Fund. He has been president of the Houston Chapter of the W&L alumni and chairman of the Houston Honor Scholarship Committee.

Active in community affairs, Ogilvie has served as a vestryman at St. Martin's Episcopal Church, president of the Frostwood Elementary PTA and the Forest Club, vice chairman of the Houston United Fund, and director of Kastle Security Systems. He also founded the Houston Rugby Club.

W. Buckner Ogilvie

Ogilvie and his wife, Jacquelin Bland Ogilvie, have four children.

Atwood to step down

Edward C. Atwood, dean of Washington and Lee's School of Commerce, Economics, and Politics the past 16 years, will step down from that post next June.

After a leave of absence during the 1986-87 academic year, Atwood will return to the University to resume teaching in the department of economics.

A search committee has been formed to choose Atwood's successor. That committee is headed by Louis W. Hodges, professor of religion.

In accepting Atwood's resignation, W&L President John D. Wilson said that Atwood's years as dean "have been eventful and fruitful ones and have earned him the deepest gratitude of the University family."

"It will be impossible to find a successor to match his faithful and caring service to the students and faculty of the School and of the larger University," Wilson said. "His administrative colleagues will also miss his droll commentary on the passing scene even as they will miss his insightful judgment and the richness of his academic experience. His decision to resign the deanship is more easily accepted because we can count upon his return to our full-time service in September of 1987.”

Prior to becoming dean of the School of Commerce, Economics, and Politics, Atwood served as dean of students at W&L. He taught economics at W&L from 1952 until 1960 when he left to join the General Electric Company's staff of economists in New York. He returned to W&L in 1962 as dean of students and professor of economics.

Williams replaces Simpson as associate dean

H. Thomas Williams Jr., associate professor of physics at Washington and Lee, has been named associate dean of the College (of arts and sciences), effective July 1, 1986.

Williams succeeds Pamela H. Simpson, who is returning to full-time teaching at the end of the current academic year. Simpson has held the deanship since 1981.

Williams' appointment is for a three-year term. He will maintain his position in the physics department and will teach on a limited basis while he serves as assistant dean.

Williams joined the Washington and Lee faculty in 1974 and is the author of numerous articles on nuclear physics. In the past, he has received research grant support from the National Science Foundation, the Virginia Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy, and the Cottrell College Science Grant program.

Simpson, a professor of art history, joined the faculty in 1973. She was named assistant dean in 1981 and promoted to associate dean in 1983. During 1984-85 Simpson chaired the University's Coeducation Steering Committee.

Professors, students team up to publish papers

Two teams of Washington and Lee students and professors have combined to publish articles in scholarly journals—one in astronomy and the other in law.

Ronald L. Reese, associate professor of physics, and C. Reade Williams, a senior politics major from Roanoke, published an article entitled “An Astronomer's Poet: Alfred, Lord Tennyson” in the November 1985 issue of the Griffith Observer, a national astronomy journal.

In their article, Reese and Williams examine Tennyson's poetry and how he used astronomy extensively in his works. Reese and Williams also note Tennyson's use of universal themes and astrological imagery and the similarities to poet John Milton's development of the same themes.

Roger Groot, professor of law, and Tom Thagard, a junior European history major from Montgomery, Ala., have teamed up to write an article forthcoming in the January 1986 issue of The Virginia Bar Association Journal. The article is entitled “Immunized Witnesses in Virginia” and deals with an obscure Virginia statute first written in 1793.

Groot and Thagard argue that the archaic terms of the statute—once understood—do not allow immunity to be granted in exchange for testimony that could convict others. The authors say the statute forbids the admission of witnesses who have been granted such “pocket immunity.”

The two articles serve to illustrate the way in which W&L professors continue to involve undergraduates in research projects and provide them the opportunity to publish.

Moreover, in the case of the Groot-Thagard team, the article represents an instance of a cooperative venture between the law and undergraduate schools.

Groot credited W&L history professor Taylor Sanders with contacting him about Thagard's interest in a related field. Said Groot: “This never would have happened on a larger campus. The faculty members' familiarity with each other's work and with the interests and abilities of students made this project possible.”

Bartering

Washington and Lee economics professor Bruce Herrick has added new meaning to the adage “You reap what you sow.”

In a lecture to his introductory economics class in October, Herrick was discussing the advantages of using money in contemporary society instead of the barter system.

“I told the students that under the barter system, if I needed a tooth filled, I would have to find a dentist who was willing to do the work in exchange for a lecture in economics,” said Herrick. “Or, if I were hungry, I would have to find a farmer to exchange potatoes for a lecture.”

Unbeknownst to Herrick, he had planted a seed that would grow into a bountiful harvest.

Two class meetings later, Herrick had completed a lecture to the same group when the bell rang to end the period. As the students filed past the professor, they pulled from their book bags various vegetables and produce items. Herrick's desk soon became a cornucopia of squash, leeks, celery, bread, potatoes, and other items.

Slightly dumbfounded, Herrick gathered his goods and retired to his office, which began to take on the appearance of a late-season produce stand.

In later conversations with students in his class, Herrick recalled that during the

Herrick and veggies

Depression it was not uncommon for students to pay their bills with goods rather than cash, a situation that would create a logistical nightmare for even the most conscientious university treasurer.

Was the produce prank planned? “Only in that there are 11 students in the class, and I received 11 distinctly different items of food,” Herrick said.

“Something like this has never happened to me before,” he added, gazing at the fruits (and vegetables) of his labors scattered across his desk. No doubt, Herrick is secretly thankful that his salary isn't paid in soybeans.

Epley to retire

E. Stewart Epley, '49, Washington and Lee's treasurer since 1980, has announced his intention to retire next summer.

Epley's retirement was announced by W&L President John D. Wilson who said: "Stewart Epley's management of the financial affairs of the University has been exemplary. The Trustees and I have had total confidence in the skill and integrity with which he has conducted his vitally important duties."

Wilson announced plans to review the current alignment of responsibilities now entrusted to the position of treasurer and to involve Trustees in the search for Epley's successor.

A native of Great Falls, Mont., Epley joined the University's development staff in 1977 before becoming treasurer three years later.

He had previously been associated with several major management and consulting firms, including McKinsey & Company and Price Waterhouse & Company. He came to W&L from a post as chief analyst for the New York State Dormitory Authority.

South Africa study continues

A three-member subcommittee of the Board of Trustees that was appointed in May to study the University's investment policy with regard to South Africa presented an interim report at the Board's fall meeting and will continue its study.

A statement issued after the meeting read, in part: "During the summer, this subcommittee became familiar with current issues and recent actions taken by some universities and other investors. On Thursday, Oct. 24, members of this subcommittee, President John D. Wilson, and Rector James M. Ballengee met with the representatives of the W&L Campaign Against Apartheid to learn of their views and recommendations on this question. The subcommittee felt that this meeting was very informative and instructive.

"An interim report, outlining the results of this meeting and discussions with the University's investment advisors and other institutions, was made to the Board of Trustees on Saturday, Oct. 26. The subcommittee's study will continue, and it is expected that a proposal will be considered by the Board at its February meeting."

W&L Ranked Among Best Buys in Colleges

The Best Buys in College Education (New York Times Books)

Washington and Lee is one of 221 colleges and universities from across the country featured in The Best Buys in College Education, a new volume by New York Times education editors Edward B. Fiske and Joseph M. Michalak.

At the outset of the new volume, Fiske and Michalak acknowledge that "there is no end to daunting statistics on the soaring cost of a college education."

But, they add, "[t]he good news is that, despite the general inability of colleges to keep their tuition levels in line with the rate of inflation, there are still plenty of colleges around that can be described as relative 'bargains.'" The book then profiles the 221 bargains the editors identified among the nation's 2,000 four-year institutions.

Washington and Lee's profile, written on the basis of data gathered from both University officials and students who filled out questionnaires, notes: "The cost of a Washington and Lee education is at the higher end of a bargain, but the outstanding nature of the academic program ranks it with colleges that usually cost half again as much."

Among the specific plusses that Best Buys cites are the Honor System and the accessibility of faculty: "The honor code is taken seriously at W&L—'It shows the influence of Robert E. Lee!'—and exams are unproctored, doors left unlocked, and the library open twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week. The faculty members are committed. 'Their doors are always open to you, and you can call them at home for help.'"

The editors mention the W&L social life, the "excellent" meals in Evans Dining Hall, active intercollegiate and intramural programs, and the University's setting in the Shenandoah Valley as assets that contribute to the quality of a Washington and Lee education.

The entry concludes: "[F]or an education that is both distinctive and distinguished, Washington and Lee is one of the best."

Edgar W. Spencer, '53 Professor of Geology

Guidebook to the Natural Bridge and Natural Bridge Caverns
(Poorhouse Mountain Studio)

The book is both a guide to two of Rockbridge County's greatest natural attractions and an educational tool for individuals interested in geology. Spencer provides a guided tour of the bridge and caverns, outlining a number of stops along the way where visitors can enjoy views of particular interest.

Various photographs and sketches illustrate the sections on the geological history of the area and the formation of the natural bridge and caverns.

A member of the Washington and Lee faculty since 1957 and head of the geology department since 1959, Spencer is the author of six textbooks. He received his bachelor's degree from Washington and Lee and his Ph.D. in geology from Columbia University.

Laurent Boetsch, '69 Assistant Professor of Romance Languages

Jose Diaz Fernandez y la otra generacion del 27 (Jose Diaz Fernandez and the Other Generation of 1927)
Editorial Pliegos of Madrid

Boetsch's book, written in Spanish, studies Jose Diaz Fernandez in the context of Spain in the 1920s and focuses on two of Fernandez's novels—El Blocao (The Blockhouse) and La Venus Mecanica (The Mechanical Venus).

Boetsch's book also demonstrates how Fernandez was able to treat social themes without abandoning the aesthetic values of the Spanish avant garde.

A member of the Washington and Lee faculty since 1976, Boetsch received his bachelor's degree from Washington and Lee. He earned both the master's and the doctorate from Middlebury College, where he served as assistant director of Middlebury's graduate program in Madrid.

Alumni Fraternity Council Created to Strengthen Ties

A new organization has recently been formed at Washington and Lee to create a stronger link between alumni and undergraduate fraternity members.

The Alumni Fraternity Council officially came into existence during Homecoming weekend when it drew up a formal charter. The council held its first organizational meeting in July.

The council is composed of alumni representatives of the 17 national fraternities that have chapters at Washington and Lee. Paul J. B. Murphy Jr., '49, who has been elected president of the organization, explains that the group's "overall objective is to provide alumni participation in a renaissance movement of the fraternity system at Washington and Lee. We hope that this can be done by encouraging more active participation of alumni in chapter activities and by addressing and proposing solutions to any system-wide problems."

Such interaction between the council and the undergraduates will, Murphy believes, bring about "a re-dedication to the basic principles and goals of fraternities and increased support of Washington and Lee's traditional values of honor and gentlemanly conduct."

Plans for the establishment of an alumni fraternity organization were first formulated in February 1984, Murphy says. At that time, representatives of national fraternities volunteered to sponsor a meeting to help promote improvements in the W&L fraternity system. Such a meeting was held in the summer of 1985, at which time the Alumni Fraternity Council was born.

The formation of the group has been greeted with enthusiasm from the rest of the University community. "The response of the administration has been outstanding," says Murphy. "The president and the dean of students voiced unqualified support for alumni participation in fraternity affairs. In addition, the Alumni Association has been very supportive of the effort." Murphy, incidentally, was recently appointed to fill an unexpired term on the board of directors of the W&L Alumni Association.

Nominations due for Alumni Service Awards

The Alumni Association is now receiving nominations for candidates for the Alumni Distinguished Service Awards.

The awards recognize alumni who have excelled in their personal and vocational lives and who have demonstrated exceptional support of and loyalty to Washington and Lee. Other qualities considered for candidates are superlative service to society, outstanding character, notable success in a profession or business, and singular contributions to worthy endeavors.

To be eligible to receive the award, a nominee must have graduated from W&L 10 years ago (in the class of 1975 or earlier). The nominee must not have received an honorary degree from W&L. Employees of the University or members of the Board of Trustees or the Alumni Board of Directors are not eligible.

Nominations should include information about the candidate's service both to Washington and Lee and to his or her community.

A committee appointed by the Alumni Board of Directors screens the nominations. The Board as a whole makes the final selections. No more than three awards are given in any one year. The awards are made during the Alumni Association's Annual Meeting, scheduled this year for May 10, 1986, in Lee Chapel.

The deadline for nominations is March 1, 1986. Nominations should be mailed to the Awards Committee, Washington and Lee Alumni, Inc., Lexington, VA 24450.

Undergraduates have joined the administration in welcoming the new organization. During Homecoming weekend, Murphy met with Jamie Hayne, '86, president of the Interfraternity Council. "Jamie expressed the IFC's eagerness to work with the Alumni Fraternity Council," said Murphy.

During its organizational meeting in July, the council established four goals for its first year of existence. The first of those, the enactment of a charter, has already been achieved. The other three objectives are to publish a handbook for fraternity house corporations, to develop a plan for the long-term renovation of the fraternities' physical plants, and to complete planning for a symposium on fraternities in the fall of 1986.

Chapter Activities

Tallahassee. The inaugural meeting of a new Tallahassee Chapter was a steak cookout held in August at the farm of the Duby Ausley, '59, a member of the Alumni Board. Don Bryant, '76, was instrumental in organizing the first gathering.

Pensacola. C. Miner Harrell, '71, president of the Pensacola Chapter, and his wife, Jeannie, were hosts for a cocktail buffet in August when two Pensacola area freshmen, Carol Couch and Scott Trimble, were welcomed into the University family.

Puget Sound. Members of the new chapter rode a ferry to Whidbey Island in August and enjoyed a picnic at the home of Ray ('52L) and Phyllis Haman.

Northwest Louisiana. The annual August outing was held at Wilson's Bistineau Inn near Shreveport.

New Orleans. A rejuvenated New Orleans chapter enjoyed an active summer and fall. The activities started with a reception in June featuring Farris Hotchkiss, director of development and university relations at W&L. About 100 alumni, students, and spouses participated in the event at which 12 entering freshmen from the New Orleans area were guests. Later in the summer R. Parke Ellis, '81, captained a W&L team that defeated the local Harvard alumni on the softball field. In late October the local committee of the Alumni-Admissions Program, under the leadership of chairman John R.

Sarpy, '72, held a reception for prospective students at the home of Martin D. Claiborne, '72. W&L Associate Admissions Director Van Pate was in attendance.

Shenandoah. The chapter held a reception and picnic for members of the entering class in late August at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Randolph Larrick, '49L, outside Winchester, Va.

Augusta-Rockingham. The chapter's annual picnic was held at the farm of Rick Chittum, '69, chapter president. W&L President John D. Wilson attended along with John Lewis, '86, president of the Executive Committee and a native of nearby Greenville.

Appalachian. Members of the Appalachian Chapter enjoyed a weekend outing in September that included an evening at the Barter Theatre in Abingdon, Va. It was followed the next day by a business meeting and a luncheon at the Martha Washington Inn before the group traveled to nearby Emory, Va., to watch the Generals' football team open its season against Emory and Henry College. Although the football outcome was not what the W&L partisans had hoped for (a 30-0 loss), the weekend concluded on an upbeat note with a post-game reception. Jim Elliott, '67L, was elected president of the chapter.

San Francisco. Washington and Lee Admissions Director Bill Hartog joined the San Francisco Chapter for a reception in September during Hartog's fall recruiting visit to the West Coast.

Winston-Salem. The Winston-Salem Chapter held its third annual barbecue in Tanglewood Park in September. The group heard Milburn K. Noell, '51, associate director of development at W&L, discuss the University's scholarship needs.

Richmond. Pamela H. Simpson, associate dean of the College, was the featured speaker at a buffet luncheon in mid-October. Dean Simpson, who chaired the University's Coeducation Steering Committee, presented a report on the early stages of coeducation, complete with slides taken during the first four weeks of the academic year.

Roanoke. Anne C. P. Schroer, who joined the University this fall as associate dean of students, provided a report on her initial impressions of W&L and the transition to coeducation at a luncheon meeting in late October. Jody Ringland, '87, a freshman dorm counselor, also provided her views of the transition. The new chapter officers are Scott Farrar, TALLAHASSEE—Sally and Don Bryant, '76, put their guests in a festive mood for the inaugural meeting of the Tallahassee Chapter.

AUGUSTA-ROCKINGHAM—"Cy" Painter (left), '33, and his son, Simon, '62, enjoyed the Augusta-Rockingham's annual picnic.

PENSACOLA—Jeannie and Miner Harrell, '71, caught a typographical error on the invitation sent to members of the Pensacola Chapter and made certain that guests at the chapter's meeting knew whom to blame for the transgression.

'76, president; Bill Wallace, '74, vice president; and A. B. Boxley, '80, secretary-treasurer.

San Diego. Members of the San Diego Chapter joined alumni from other Virginia colleges for the fifth annual San Diego "Old Dominion Day" Reunion in mid-October.

Oklahoma City. The Oklahoma City Chapter members were invited to participate in the third annual Old Dominion Cocktail Party hosted by the University of Virginia's Oklahoma City chapter in October.

Estate Planning Sessions

Two Florida alumni chapters—Jacksonville and Florida West Coast—had special programs on the financial, tax and estate aspects of deferred (income-retained) or estate-planned gifts at separate meetings in September.

Farris Hotchkiss, director of development and university relations, was joined by Bill Washburn and Milburn Noell, associate directors of development, in presenting the program on the tax and financial advantages of making the deferred (as opposed to outright) gifts.

The Florida West Coast Chapter held two meetings on the subject, one at the University Club in Tampa and the other at the St. Petersburg Yacht Club, while the Jacksonville Chapter met at the River Club.

Spring Reunions

Washington and Lee will hold its annual spring reunions on May 8, 9, and 10 in 1986.

The weekend events begin May 8 with a keynote address in Lee Chapel. During the three days, alumni participate in a variety of activities, including parties and banquets for their reunion class.

Classes holding their reunions this year will be 1931, 1936, 1941, 1946, 1951, 1956, 1961, 1966, 1971, 1976, and 1981.

Information on the program and accommodations for the weekend will be forthcoming from the Alumni Office.

79th Fancy Dress

The 79th annual Fancy Dress Ball has been scheduled for Friday, March 7, 1986, in Warner Center. Alumni are invited to attend.

For information, contact the Student Activities Board, University Center, Washington and Lee University, Lexington, VA 24450.

Alumni President's Report

Cadaver Gift to Alumni House, Plaque for Medal of Honor Winner

by William N. Clements, '50

Fellow Alumni:

Your Alumni Board met October 10 and 11 during the Homecoming weekend. Here is your report of that meeting:

The University has received a generous gift pledge of $50,000 from the Cadaver Society to be used specifically for upgrading the Alumni House. Nothing is more timely or needed. The first $10,000 of the gift will be used to dress up the downstairs area of the Alumni House. No building on the campus gets more traffic or use from alumni. The gift is very much appreciated. Thanks, Cadaver, whoever you are.

The Alumni Board forwarded a resolution to the Board of Trustees requesting that a plaque be placed in Lee Chapel in memory of James Howard Monroe, Class of 1966, who was killed in action in Vietnam and was posthumously awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor. Our research indicates that Jim Monroe is the only Washington and Lee alumnus who has received the nation's highest military honor. (If we have overlooked a previous Medal of Honor winner, we hope that someone will advise us so that all appropriate names can be included on the plaque.) At their meeting later in October, the Trustees approved our resolution. The plaque will be installed in May during the 20th reunion activities of the Class of 1966— Jim Monroe's class.

The Alumni Board now numbers 19 members and will be increased to 20 members in 1986. There are two basic committees of the Board: University Programs, which is concerned with internal matters of the University, and Alumni Programs, which deals with the external area of alumni activities.

The University Programs Committee concerns itself with such matters as admissions, fraternities, the coeducation transition, athletics; and the Annual Fund. These areas are covered through reports to the committee from members of the University's faculty and administration.

Briefly, the admissions office reported that applications are still increasing over last year's record totals; the coeducation transition is progressing smoothly; athletics will be discussed more fully in the May meeting of the Alumni Board; and the early stages of the 1985-86 Annual Fund was discussed in detail by James Jennings, '65, '72L, who is chairman of the Annual Fund and also a member of the Alumni Board.

The University Programs Committee focused primarily on the issue of fraternities and specifically the newly formed Alumni Fraternity Council under the leadership of Paul Murphy, '49, who is also a member of the Alumni Board. The formation of this new council is reported in detail on page 46 of this issue of the Alumni Magazine. The Alumni Fraternity Council hopes to have in place as soon as possible Alumni House Committees in each fraternity that will oversee the operations of the fraternities. In some cases, as in the case of Sigma Nu for instance, the Alumni House Committee can actually lease the building from the University and sublet it to the chapter. To improve the physical appearance of the fraternity houses, the Alumni House Committees will be the vehicle for raising the needed funds for repairs from fraternity alumni and will be responsible for the proper use of those funds.

*William N. Clements,
President
Alumni Association*

The Alumni Programs Committee discussed chapter activities, Kathekon (our student alumni group), homecomings and reunions, alumni travel programs, and career assistance.

Kathekon, organized a year ago by associate alumni director Buddy Atkins, '68, has become one of the finest organizations on the campus. Kathekon members are involved in all phases of the University's life—from freshman orientation to phonathons for the Annual Fund to dedicated work in the Alumni Office. This group of students represents the current campus leaders who will be our alumni leaders once they graduate.

The Alumni Programs Committee is working to prepare a Model Chapter Program and a handbook for chapter presidents in hopes of unifying our activities across the country as well as strengthening our individual chapter membership. You should know that we now have a total of 81 alumni chapters—almost double the 41 chapters that we had in 1966.

The Alumni Board thinks that the staff of the Alumni Office is doing an excellent job in the homecoming and reunion programs and in making alumni travel programs available.

The Alumni Programs Committee is currently working on plans to help improve the career planning and assistance program for undergraduates through coordinating the efforts of the University Office of Career Development and the Alumni Office. We hope in the future to be able to involve alumni on a more formal basis in the career development area. We think that this plan should be carried into the chapters themselves and will thereby provide further incentive for young men and women to consider Washington and Lee.

It was my duty as president of the Alumni Board to report the proceedings of our October meeting to the Board of Trustees. That report was made to the Trustees on October 26.

Finally, from one who has the good fortune (and a good reason) to have to return to Washington and Lee often, let me assure you that the coeducation transition is going smoothly. Students, faculty, and all members of the administration are upbeat. The University remains the same simply because our truly new freshmen are just as interested in the traditions and uniqueness of Washington and Lee as we ever were.

Alumnus Earns Assist in Baseball Settlement

Although B. Davis Jackson has not played baseball on a regular basis since his Little League days, the 1976 Washington and Lee graduate was credited with an assist that helped end major league baseball's brief strike this summer.

Jackson's assist came in the form of some advice that he offered Commissioner Peter Ueberroth.

According to a report published in the San Antonio Express-News, Jackson wrote a letter to Ueberroth on July 18 and proposed that the "untapped sources of baseball, particularly unused seating capacity and new broadcasting contracts," be used to resolve the dispute between owners and the Major League Players Association.

Jackson, a Houston native who has his own accounting firm in New Braunfels, Texas, viewed his suggestion as "an unsolicited letter-to-the-editor type of thing. I never expected it to receive such top-level attention."

But the letter did indeed receive attention—from the top. On Aug. 1, Jackson got a telephone call from the commissioner's office, thanking him for his suggestions. Jackson was one of three individuals who were contacted by Ueberroth's office after they had written the commissioner with proposals for settling the dispute.

Jackson's proposals not only caught Ueberroth's eye, but also captured the attention of the media. He received calls from both The CBS Morning News and NBC's Today show. And, the San Antonio newspaper account noted, the Jackson's family dinner was repeatedly interrupted by reporters from newspapers, television news teams, and national wire services on the day Ueberroth's office called.

Exactly what was it about Jackson's proposals that he was thrust into the limelight? He believed the key to resolving the problems between the players and the owners involved using broadcasting contracts to improve attendance at games. "They go hand-in-hand," he said. "If the owners cut ticket prices and the players take a fixed percentage of broadcasting revenue, it would serve everyone.

"The idea has been lingering in my mind," Jackson explained. "So I decided to write the letter. . . . I am delighted that the commissioner's office called me."

Although Jackson has never before sent such a letter to a top-ranking sports official, it is not the first time he has shared his extensive baseball knowledge with the world. His book, The Last Word in Baseball Statistics, is a compilation of nearly every statistic available from the 1984 baseball season.

And Furthermore

EDITOR:

I read with disbelief the article in the July/August 1985 issue of the Alumni Magazine entitled "New Drug Policy." The particular portion which caused my dismay was the statement that the "use of racial, ethnic, religious, or sexual slurs" is now a major offense which could warrant suspension or dismissal from the University.

While I am not trying to defend or encourage the use of any slurs, an attempt to make them "illegal" in the eyes of the University is wrong, silly and just plain dumb for several reasons.

First, whatever happened to free speech? The new rule is really light years beyond the limits of acceptable Big Brotherhoods. Other than instances involving serious attempts to cause harm, it is really none of the University's business what students say in private. Private speech control, like thought control, is simply not acceptable. The University should allow the expression of all points of view, not just ones that some group finds acceptable.

Second, how can any such restriction be evenly enforced? Any poor slur-user who is suspended or dismissed will be kicked out for something that most everyone does at one time or another without consequences. Since slur-using is so widespread, actual cases reported for discipline are more likely to be motivated by personal animosity than by a respect for rules or a feeling that a moral issue is at stake. The specter of someone with a festering grudge listening to conversations for slurs to report is pretty sickening but it is likely to occur.

Third, what is a slur? Unlike stealing, cheating or other traditional areas for serious discipline, the use of slurs presents huge grey areas. If I say that women would make worse combat soldiers than men, I feel that I am making a statement of fact even though some feminists might feel that I have let loose a slur. These are simply not distinctions we want the University to make for us. The decision of whether or not a statement is a slur should certainly not be an event upon which someone's ability to graduate hinges. Finally, how serious a problem is this? Are students really so sensitive these days that they need to be protected from hearing occasional slurs even though it may mean kicking someone else out of the University? Aren't we trivializing an honor system that otherwise deals with major moral issues? The use of slurs does not make my list of the world's top million problems, and it seems to me that those who dreamed up the new rule on slurring have too much idle time on their hands. No slur intended.

EDITOR:

You did a splendid job with the September/October issue of the Alumni Magazine presenting the highlights of the Class of 1989. Of course, you had the best of subjects. Congratulations to you and the class.

EDITOR:

I just received the September/October issue of the Alumni Magazine. I thought it was the most exciting and inspiring issue ever. I can't tell you how great it is to see women and men together in these pictures and know that they are students together.

For the first time I am able to recommend W&L to my students [at Episcopal High School] and to my friends' children. I am certain W&L is now ready to move into a new era of prestige and quality. Congratulations.
