W&L IN TAIWAN

The Reeves Collection of Porcelain and a Delegation
Of University Officials Visit the Republic of China

Washington and Lee's famed Reeves Collection of Chinese export porcelain went "home" this summer for the first time—for an historic display in the National Museum of History of the Republic of China (Taiwan).

The exhibition of 93 of the most important pieces from the Reeves Collection was greeted in Taipei, the capital city, with the most enthusiastic reception anywhere in its five years of travel.

It was natural that it should be so in Taiwan. The W&L loan exhibition marked the first time the Chinese people have seen the porcelain wares their ancestors created 150 and 200 years ago—the first time, in fact, according to China's ambassador to the United States, James C. H. Shen, that an exhibition of Chinese porcelain produced specifically for export to the West had been shown in the land of its origin.

Whitehead, who was responsible for developing the Reeves Collection and has been its curator since it came to the University in 1967, unpacks the 93 items sent to Taiwan for the month-long National Museum exhibition.

And no less enthusiastic was the greeting the Chinese nationalists gave to a W&L delegation which visited Taiwan for eight days—as guests of the government of the Republic of China and the Pacific Cultural Foundation—in conjunction with the opening of the National Museum exhibition. The 16 W&L representatives were led by President and Mrs. Robert E. R. Huntley; H. Gordon Leggett, '54, a member of the University Board of Trustees, with Mrs. Leggett; and Treasurer (and developer and curator of the Reeves Collection) James W. Whitehead, with Mrs. Whitehead.

When it opened, Chinese of every social station, from every walk of life, jammed the National Museum to view the highlights of the Reeves Collection—

The plate, which became part of the National Museum's permanent collection, is a representative example of early-19th-century export porcelain; the piece was made for the Brown family of Providence, R.I.—ancestors of Louise Herreshoff Reeves and the first known traders from America to visit the Orient. Above right: Dr. Jeanne Tchong Koei Li, president of the Pacific Cultural Foundation, charmed the W&L delegation. selected meticulously by the Whiteheads to reflect in microcosm the nature of the cross-cultural influences between Imperial China and the American Colonies (and subsequently the brand-new United States). The Chinese smiled, as Americans do, when they saw the Declaration of Independence cream pitcher, which depicts the Signers with distinctly Oriental features; they stood in reverence as they looked at George Washington's dinner plate, for the Chinese draw important parallels between Washington and Chiang Kai-shek. Mostly, however, they were awed—as are those who view it from wherever; Europe and the Orient no less than Baltimore and Dayton—at the Reeves Collection as a spectacular example of “history-in-porcelain,” the story of 18th- and early-19th-century aesthetic sensibilities, of American patriotic fervor, of the importance of family and religion, of commerce and the very earliest days of East-West trade—and, hardly least of all, of skillful elegance in craftsmanship.

The visit of the Reeves Collection to its homeland is only the most recent, though surely the most publicly dramatic, indication of Washington and Lee's strong cultural ties with nationalist China. Throughout the early years of the 20th century, of course, alumni of the University played a critical role in the Westernization of China. In the 1970s, the University established a spring-term "Study Abroad" program in association with Taiwan's College of Chinese Culture; only this year, a faculty-supervised summer-study program in Taiwan (the first formal summer session at

For many years, the University has been host to visiting Chinese artists (primarily) and others.

It was recognition of that very special, long-standing relationship that led to the highlight of the W&L delegation's visit to Taiwan—presentation of the Chinese Cultural Medallion, the highest honor in the power of the government there to confer on a foreigner, to President Huntley.

“For many years,” the citation—read by China's Minister of Education, Chu Hwei-sen—declared, “the President Huntley's medallion—W&L's—was only the 11th ever presented.

Most of the W&L delegation's eight days in Taiwan was devoted to visiting places of cultural, educational or historic importance; it was characterized by VIP treatment in every possible detail. W&L's hosts were anxious to show the reasons why they regard their ties with the United States as both logical and essential—culturally as well as politically.

They did it in superb fashion.

Taiwan preserves the legendary Chinese graciousness. It has all the natural beauty that has characterized Chinese painting since the beginning of art. There are no gentler, more thoughtful, more industrious people anywhere. In important respects they have modeled their approach to civic life after the 200-year American experiment; they have taken it (as one member of the W&L delegation marveled) and adapted it to a country in constant military peril, the size of half of New England—and in only 30 years they have stabilized it and (in some ways which Americans might well envy) refined it.

Top left: A group of China's most prominent artists conducted a fast-paced demonstration for the Washington and Lee guests. Top right: Mr. and Mrs. Kao Yi-hung, at left, painted a watercolor picture as the W&L delegation looked on, then presented it to the University. Above left: The delegation's hosts took them halfway across Taiwan to see the breathtaking East-West Highway and the Taroko Gorge (pictured). The two women in the center are Mrs. Sample and Mrs. Whitehead. Above center: As the trip progressed, the W&L visitors became increasingly proficient with the use of chopsticks; President Huntley proves it with an egg. (Another member of the delegation was not so skillful, and when he tried the trick, he mortified himself and sent the group's host to the dry-cleaner's.) Above right: Culinary elegance was routine; the Chinese regard it ideally as a visual art as well as gastronomic. Nothing in the course of the trip, however, approached the achievement of the chef who prepared lobster with electrified eyes—maraschino cherries with tiny battery-powered Christmas-tree lights inside.

January 22, 1917.

Rev. J. Sidney Peters,
Commissioner of Prohibition,
Richmond, Virginia.

My dear Sir:

I have been informed that a warrant has been issued for Miss Annie J. White, the librarian of Washington and Lee University, for violation of the prohibition law and that the matter has been sent to the Grand Jury. You, of course, know that I am in full sympathy with the prohibition law and with your efforts to see that it is fully enforced, but I feel that it should be enforced in a reasonable and common sense way with a view to accomplishing its objects and without punishing any who have not intentionally violated the law and whose acts have done nothing to encourage the evils against which the law is intended to provide. The facts in regard to this case can be substantiated to be as follows:

Miss Annie White is a lady of the highest standing and character, has been a resident of this community as one of a very large and prominent family all her life. She has been librarian of the University of Washington and Lee for some twenty-five or thirty years, and from this you will see that she is reaching an age which must soon necessarily justify her retirement from active labors.

The facts in regard to the purchasing of the liquor are as follows: About the 15th of November Miss White had shipped to her from another State one quart of rum used for cooking, valued at fifty-five cents. She, being innocent of the law, supposed that when the package came it would be delivered as any other express package. She had ordered it to be used in her Thanksgiving dinner, but Thanksgiving Day arrived and she had not received her package so she called up the express office to know if it had come, and was advised that it had, and she inquired why it had not been delivered to her, and was told that the character of the package demanded her presence to receipt for the same. As it was too late to be used at Thanksgiving she was not much concerned about getting it and did not call for it until the Saturday night before Christmas, when she called at the express office after the hour of five o'clock and was advised that she could not get it. The next day being Sunday and the following day being Christmas Day she could not get it until after Christmas, and thus her opportunity to use it both on Thanksgiving and at Christmas had been frustrated. Again being unconcerned about it she left it in the office until about the 2nd of January, or possibly a little later, when she was advised that another package had arrived for her and was advised to call and get the same. This turned out to be one quart of scotch whiskey which a lady friend in Philadelphia had sent her. She went to the office to get it and while there concluded to get the other package. The agent told her that he had some doubts about the legality of taking out both at one time but she referred to the fact that the quart of rum had both been ordered and received at the office more than thirty days previous, and told the agent that under the circumstances the law would not prevent her from getting out the package, especially when it was known that the consignee was a person of respectability and had no intention of violating the law. The agent thereupon delivered to her both the packages and she signed for them without having the remotest idea of what she was signing other than that it was a receipt for the liquor. These are the facts as I am reliably informed.

It is not only my own opinion, but it seems to be the opinion generally, that no grand jury would indict Miss White under the circumstances and that no jury would convict her. The situation is embarrassing not only to Miss White but to the University and to the public, and especially to that part of the public which are thoroughly interested in the wise and faithful enforcement of the prohibition law, and as we have heard is producing much satisfaction among those who would like to see as much discredit as possible thrown upon the law. I have been informed that several similar cases have been looked into by your Deputy and very wisely dismissed.

You will, of course, thoroughly understand the especial features of the law which Miss White's conduct has apparently broken. I am advised that among these features it is claimed that Miss White is not such a head of a family as would justify her in receiving liquor at all. In this regard I can only state the fact that Miss White owns and occupies a dwelling on the college campus, and to supplement her salary as librarian she regularly keeps house and takes student boarders in her home for a consideration.

In conclusion I think I can safely say that a dismissal of this case will give entire satisfaction to those who are endeavoring to uphold your hands, and will perhaps bring more or less confusion to those who would thwart your objects.

I have heard that the Commonwealth's Attorney of this County has stated to your Deputy that any grand jury will indict Miss White and any petit jury would convict her. I do not know that he made such a statement, but I do know that, so far as I can gather, there is not a single person who shares such belief. If he really made such a remark, it is easily explicable to those who know him, and should not prejudice her case.

I hear your Deputy excused two or three other ladies here who were technically guilty of violating the law, and I feel personally certain that a similar decision in this case also will advance the prohibition cause in this community rather than injure it. I write this as an ardent prohibitionist and a zealous worker for the cause in our Virginia campaign.

Sincerely,
HENRY LOUIS SMITH
President

Rupert Latture (who, incidentally, began his 67th year of association with Washington and Lee this autumn) lately has been sorting through some of the official papers of W&L presidents from the early years of the century. He came across this bijou concerning the University's beloved, legendary Miss Annie Jo White, librarian for many years and founder of the Fancy Dress Ball, who apparently also knew how to have good times herself as well as organize them for others. By way of background, before national Prohibition went into effect, Virginia had its own law which limited each householder to one quart of "ardent spirits" a month, and which allowed a female to purchase her quart only if she qualified as the "head of a family." The story has a happy ending; two weeks after Dr. Smith wrote this letter, the Rockbridge grand jury tossed out the charge against Miss Annie Jo.

ARTS WORKSHOP '78

If It's on Campus, It Must Be Summer

Since the beginning of the Rockbridge Fine Arts Workshop in 1971, Washington and Lee has offered the program full use of its campus. DuPont Hall has been program headquarters each summer, and Lee Chapel and the campus grounds have been used for the exhibitions and programs at the close of each session.

The workshop was organized by five women with a lively interest in the arts and a common dedication to providing opportunities to area children—Rae Hickman (wife of Dr. Cleveland P. Hickman Jr., professor of biology), who taught piano; Judy Hotchkiss (Mrs. Farris; he's director of development), dance; Pree Ray (Mrs. George W.; he's professor of English), drama; Elise Sprunt (Mrs. David W.; he's University chaplain, Fletcher Otey Thomas Professor of Religion, and head of the religion department), art; and Charlene Jarrett (Mrs. H. Marshall; he's professor of European history), piano.

Enrollment in the program has nearly doubled over the past eight years. At the outset, 67 youngsters from age six to 18 enrolled in the summer workshop. The enrollment for this past summer, however, was 130, with a staff of 24 members.

New programs were offered this year in small-group percussion and wind instrument, technical theatre, and poetry and printmaking. The Workshop has had a Youth Orchestra for three years as well.

Most financial backing for the Rockbridge

Fine Arts Workshop comes in the form of contributions from individuals and area businesses and occasional grant support from the National Endowment for the Arts.

'BEST AND BRAVEST'

When W&L's Rockwell Was in the Air, No German Passed

In 1916, The New York Times followed the exploits of Kiffin Rockwell with a detailed zeal usually reserved for rising sports heroes.

But Rockwell was not playing games.

He was one of the gifted young pilots of the Lafayette Escadrille, whose American volunteers flew on behalf of France between April 1916 and February 1918. The squadron's official history describes Rockwell as the Escadrille's "soul." He downed the first German plane credited to the unit on May 18, 1916.

Many of his four-score sorties ranged above the beleaguered fortress of Verdun, where nearly a million casualties were suffered by German assault troops and French defenders during the 1916 campaign. In May of that year Rockwell wrote:

The most terrible fighting was going on underneath me the whole time. But I am not going to try to express my impressions, because I can't. At the same time . . . one of my friends was over my head, about 1,500 feet high, having a death struggle with a German machine, which he succeeded in bringing down.

Rockwell himself downed at least four German planes before he was killed over Alsace on Sept. 23, 1916. His commander said:

When Rockwell was in the air, no German passed . . . and he was in the air most of the time. . . . The Best and Bravest of us all is no more.

An exhibit of memorabilia at the Smithsonian Institution's National Air and Space Museum in Washington, D.C., tells the Escadrille story and features Sgt. Kiffin Rockwell's uniform.

Below: Clippings from the New York Times, 1916: Kiffin wrote to Paul in June 1916: "For Heaven's sake, let's try and shut down on the publicity about the Escadrille!" “probably the first American” to offer his services to the French cause.

Rockwell, who said he was “paying my part of our debt to Lafayette and Rochambeau,” wrote the French consul on Aug. 3, 1914, stating that he would “rather fight under the French Flag than any other, as I greatly admire your Nation. If my services can be used by your country, I will bring my brother, who also desires to fight” for France.

His brother, Paul Ayres Rockwell, is also a W&L alumnus. In August 1914, the two men enlisted in the French foreign legion. A year later, Kiffin transferred to the air unit. Paul—who has been decorated three times with the French Legion of Honor—remained in France after the war, where he had a distinguished career as an author and journalist. He was with the French army when France fell in 1940 and spent five years with the U.S. Air Corps after the Americans entered the Second World War.

Col. Paul Rockwell, who now lives in Asheville, N.C., recently returned to Lexington with a group touring Virginia’s Civil War battlefields. He discussed various memorials to Kiffin in Tennessee, the Carolinas, Washington, D.C., and in France, where a ceremony takes place each year at Kiffin’s grave. Paul Rockwell adds, however, that “the memorial to him which I cherish the most and of which I am most proud is the bronze tablet” in Lee Chapel.

The Lee Chapel is my Shrine of Shrines [writes Paul Rockwell], a place to worship and pray and be encouraged. Merely to walk about the old W&L campus is healing at all seasons of the year, and I yearn often to return. . . . The soul of anyone who cannot get inspiration by looking about the W&L and V.M.I. campuses is dead, and I pity him.

Washington and Lee has been selected as one of five regional offices of the Virginia Research Center for Archaeology.

Under the arrangement, Washington and Lee students and faculty will be involved extensively in fieldwork at important archaeological sites in Alleghany, Botetourt and Rockbridge Counties, with emphasis on the Rockbridge area.

"This is a tremendously exciting development for Washington and Lee," said Dr. John M. McDaniel, assistant professor of anthropology. "We will be part of the mainstream of archaeological events throughout the state."

Located in Tucker Annex, one of the former faculty residences at the north edge of the Colonnade, the office will be a research arm of W&L's Department of Sociology and Anthropology. There are 12 students currently enrolled in the survey archaeology course, which will be directly involved with the activities of the regional preservation office.

Organizers of the program say the primary importance of the new office lies in the vast opportunity to "find and preserve keys to the area's past."

If investigations at a site should turn up anything of historical significance, the office may nominate the site to the National Register of Historic Places.

"This program will be a tremendous asset for our students," Dr. McDaniel said. "It is unusual and flattering that this program is established at the undergraduate level."

In addition to conducting surveys on federally funded construction sites, the office will also conduct short-term environmental impact studies as requested by the state.

The arrangement will provide students an opportunity to acquire practical experience in survey archaeology, according to Dr. William Kelso, commissioner of the Virginia Research Center for Archaeology.

Kelso pointed to the "fine reputation" W&L's archaeology department has achieved within the archaeological community as reason for the University's selection to be the location for a regional office. He also praised Dr. McDaniel for his work with the archaeological program at W&L.

Dr. McDaniel, director of the Liberty Hall excavation since it began in 1974, will be the regional office advisor. He will be assisted by Dr. I. Taylor Sanders II, University historian, and Dr. Michael A. Pleva, associate professor of chemistry.

Douglas McLearn, a graduate of Virginia Polytechnical Institute with a master's degree in anthropology from the University of Virginia, has been appointed survey archaeologist for the W&L office. In addition to his responsibilities for pre-construction surveys in the three-county area, McLearn will also participate in W&L archaeology courses and seminars.

The newly begun regional program is an outgrowth of a 1966 federal law, the Historic Preservation Act, which makes each state responsible for nominations to the National Register of Historic Places.

Archaeological studies are also required to determine that nothing of cultural significance will be destroyed by construction at sites where government funds will be used, even if located on private land.

New alumni magazine staff writer appointed

Jeffrey L. M. Hazel, a 1977 W&L graduate and a staff reporter for the Buena Vista (Va.) News since last year, became assistant director of publications in September.

He will occupy the position for one year under a program which annually brings a recent W&L graduate into the University's publications and news-information operations. Hazel takes the place of Douglass W. Dewing, who is now in law school at Washington University, St. Louis, Mo. Dewing had held the job since the one-year-assistant program was inaugurated last summer.

Hazel earned his B.A. degree in philosophy, with extensive course work in English and creative writing. He received the Fielder Cook Award for creative filmmaking in 1977 and had fiction published in the W&L student literary magazine, Ariel.

As assistant publications director at W&L, Hazel has substantial duties with the alumni magazine, edits the Weekly Calendar, and works closely with the W&L news office, handling most routine news-release writing.

Shenandoah fiction takes national honors

Two stories originally published in Shenandoah, Washington and Lee's quarterly literary review, have been selected as 1978 O. Henry Award winners.

The two are "My Father's Jokes" by Patricia Zelver, which appeared in the winter 1978 issue, and "Xmas" by Thomas Disch, which appeared in the summer 1977 issue.

Each year 18 stories are selected to appear in the O. Henry Prize Stories collection, published by Doubleday in April.

New theatre season— and a new approach

The University Theatre—formerly the Troubadours—will open the fall season late in October with a production of Otherwise Engaged by Simon Gray. Two other major productions, Ibsen's A Doll's House and Candida by George Bernard Shaw, will follow during the season.

Otherwise Engaged will be directed by John Jacobsen, a senior drama major. The play will be the premiere production in a new experimental theatre series at W&L, "Studio Presentations."

The studio presentations will replace the one-year thesis project previously required of each senior drama major. The series provides students with an opportunity to experiment with directing and producing a play and also encourages innovations such as multimedia shows—in which film and live actors work together in the same space—and post-performance audience critiques, according to Thomas Ziegler, assistant professor of fine arts and theatre.

Federal grant supports high-blood-pressure study

A team of biomedical investigators, including H. Eugene King, W&L professor of psychology, has been awarded a $190,000 federal grant to support research into the consequences of hypertension.

Dr. King, a member of the W&L faculty since 1977 and a research psychologist experienced in evaluating human brain-behavior relationships, will conduct the behavioral research under the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute grant. Working with him will be Dr. Robert E. Miller, another experienced research psychologist and a long-time colleague of Dr. King.

The two scientists will undertake detailed investigations over the next three years into the changes in behavior which may result from marked and persistent elevation of the blood pressure in the brain.

"Hypertension is a leading health problem of the day," according to Dr. King. "Everyone has an intuitive grasp of the fact that when something is exciting, one's heart pumps faster. If something is chronically exciting—call it stress if you want—be it negative or positive, there will be a chronic effect. This is the focus of our study: If one has hypertension, then what are its consequences?"

The research team will direct its attention to the effects of sustained high blood pressure on the brain. This is the least studied of the three organs most likely to be affected by persistent blood-pressure elevation, King said. (The kidney and the heart are the other two.)

Much of the test-data analysis, which will be collected at the University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine, is expected to be carried out using W&L's newly installed computer facilities. Dr. King will make periodic visits on weekends throughout the academic year to supervise the information-gathering process at the Pittsburgh Medical School.

Phillips continues widespread professional involvements

Dr. Charles F. Phillips Jr., professor of economics, has been elected to a second term as national president of Omicron Delta Epsilon (ODE), the honor society for economists.

He had been president of the organization in 1976 and 1977, and became acting president this past summer when his successor, Dr. I. James Pikel, died. Phillips was elected to fill out Dr. Pikel's complete term at a meeting of the ODE board of directors this month.

Phillips will be the leadoff speaker at a two-day conference on utility regulation in October in Washington, D.C.

His topic will be "Public Utilities and Regulation." The symposium is sponsored by Public Utilities Reports Inc., publishers of the journal Public Utilities Fortnightly and the industry's regular series of reports on regulatory decisions.

In September, Phillips was also a speaker at the regular public utilities seminar sponsored in New York City by Irving Trust Co. His discussion topic was "The Cost-of-Money Approach." The Irving Trust seminars are designed for utility executives and members of state regulatory agencies. His participation marked the 10th time Phillips has been a speaker in the series.

Back to school, 1978

W&L opened its 230th academic year this fall with its largest enrollment ever—1,742.

In the School of Law, 345 men and women began the year in August. The student population is higher than it has ever been before, reflecting the gradual expansion in the size of each entering class since the law school moved into Lewis Hall in 1976. That planned expansion has now been completed, and the size of the law student body is expected to stay in the 340-350 range.

At the undergraduate level, the University found itself with one of its biggest freshman classes of all times—381 men. The exceptionally large freshman class is the result of a much-higher-than-expected "confirmation rate" among applicants to whom the University offered admission last spring. In the recent past, between 45 and 50 percent of the applicants whom W&L accepted have actually ended up attending W&L. This year the confirmation rate was 57 percent.

Because of the unusually large size of the class, W&L leased part of the old Robert E. Lee Hotel for use as a freshman dorm (as the University did three years ago, when another exceptionally large class enrolled). Generally, the size of the freshman class varies between 350 and 365, the range the University considers ideal.

The absolute number of applications W&L received for undergraduate admission was down substantially this year—from 1,320—a year ago to 975. Admissions officials attribute the drop largely to the new writing essay which the University required of all applicants for the first time this year, designed to allow case-by-case evaluation of each applicant's ability to think and write.

But the quality was not down. The dropoff came primarily among prospective applicants whose motivation to attend W&L seems to have been marginal from the outset and among poorer students whose chances of being offered admission were not good.

Statistical data for the new freshman class show that its members are at least as well qualified academically, as measured by objective data, as last year's normal-size freshman class. Combined College Board scores were virtually the same, 1,129 this year versus 1,130 a year ago.

The "average" W&L freshman this year ranked in the top quarter of his high-school class, with a mean standing of 73.7 on a base of 100, and 42 percent of this year's freshmen graduated in the top one-fifth of their high-school classes.

Goshen Road, Rockbridge County, by Sally Mann

Mann photos draw critics' praise

An exhibition of photographs by 11 Southern artists, including Washington and Lee's Sally Mann, has drawn critical praise from reviewers of both the Washington (D.C.) Post and Star. The exhibition, "I Shall Leave One Land Unvisited," took place in Washington's Corcoran Museum.

Paul Richard, chief critic for the Post, wrote that Ms. Mann's landscape photographs are "subtle and elegant. . . [Her work] enralls the eye."

Benjamin Forgey, reviewer for the Star, said her "expectant otherworldliness . . . is of a gentler sort" than some of the works by other photographers in the show. "There is something waiting around that elegant bend of highway," he commented of her photograph of the FIVE QUARTS OF CAR IN A FOUR-QUART LOT . . .

Or,
The Arithmetic
Of Parking as Taught
By the Students

The key to running a successful college: Have plenty of football for the alumni, sex for the students, and parking for the faculty. —CLARK KERR, when he was president of UCLA

If you lack confidence in the ingenuity and imagination and inventiveness of college kids today, take heart. So what if they can't tell a participle from a patella, and maybe they do think the multiplication tables are located in the biology lab. Lock horns and match wits with them in the classroom if you must, but keep out of their parking lots. If you think it's nerve-racking at Bloomingdale's on a summer Saturday afternoon, keep your distance from your otherwise-friendly college campus whenever classes are in session.

Learn from the example at Washington and Lee—situated in the tranquil, easygoing Valley of Virginia, in Lexington, where even Robert E. Lee could arrive in town and hardly cause a stir, a scant hundred years or so ago, as he did. Sleepy, some would say—who have never been here when the students are barrelling to class.

It used to be, as recently as the late 1960s, that W&L students simply crammed their cars behind the gym in a jumble that would send any self-respecting traffic engineer to the pacemaker dispensary. You'd leave your keys in the ignition, so the people whom you'd blocked might move your car if they were out of class sooner than you. Even if you were accustomed to driving a big American car, you quickly learned to maneuver a VW or an Opel, or else you went to the Co-op for coffee for a few hours.

(The faculty, of course, insists that only the faculty is reduced to driving VWs and Opels, that the students all own block-long Oldsmobiles and Bentleys, or if a small car, then at least a Porsche or a Jaguar. Jealousy is a relentless mistress.)

That pattern endured until six or eight years ago, when two things happened. One was that Washington

Goshen Road in Rockbridge County, "but it is nothing more, nor less, than the promise of perfect self-discovery."

Following its Corcoran premiere, the exhibition begins a three-year tour of museums and galleries throughout the United States.

The 11-person exhibition marks the second time in a year Ms. Mann's photos have been shown at the Corcoran. Last autumn, her one-woman exhibition, "Lewis Hall Portfolio"—pictures taken during construction of W&L's new law building—also brought critical raves.

Math teacher participates in symposium on the '80s

Robert L. Wilson, associate professor of mathematics, participated in a conference on the prospects for mathematics education in the 1980s, over the summer.

The conference, "Prime-80," was sponsored by the Mathematics Association of America.

More than 50 mathematicians from around the country attended the conference, which recommended that mathematics educators "undertake immediately the project of defining, or redefining, the basic skills that mathematics education should impart to every citizen."

Wilson was one of only a small number of teachers from undergraduate

'78 art season opens

The 1978 duPont Gallery art season opened in September with the first of a series of exhibitions organized in cooperation with Dr. and Mrs. Jacob Weinstein of Washington, D.C., parents of an alumnus and owners of Jacob's Ladder Gallery in Washington.

The September show was of the paintings of Dan Kuhne, a Maryland artist who emerged on the national art scene in 1972 through an exhibition at Jacob's Ladder. During the first week of his W&L show, Kuhne visited the University for a reception and a series of workshop sessions with W&L art students.

Dr. and Mrs. Weinstein have been important friends and benefactors of the University and its contemporary art collections for several years, and recently they established a fund to enable W&L students to study with practicing artists.

New teachers

Five new teachers in the School of Law and six teachers and a research associate in the undergraduate divisions joined W&L's faculty in September.

In the School of Law, Jan G. Deutsch is a visiting professor for 1978-79. He is a B.A., LL.B. and Ph.D. graduate of Yale University and has an M.A. degree from Clare College, Cambridge. He has taught at Yale, Stanford, Georgetown, Florida and Michigan.

Peter G. Glenn, a member of the law faculty at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, is visiting associate professor of law at W&L this year. He received his law degree from the University of Pennsylvania following his undergraduate education at Middlebury.

New assistant professors of law are Samuel W. Calhoun and Edward O. Henneman, and Denis J. Brion is visiting assistant law professor.

Calhoun is a graduate of Harvard and and Lee expanded the gym, and Caterpillars and cranes, bigger than even a Buick, pushed the student cars out. The other was placid little Lexington's Great Bank Heist. It seems that a larcenous local reprobate resolved one day to acquire a substantial sum of cash, but alas possessed neither a savings account nor his own set of getaway wheels. He knew, however, that an abundance of cars was to be found behind the Washington and Lee gym, all with their keys conveniently left in the ignition. So he helped himself to one, and relieved the Rockbridge Bank of funds sufficient to relieve his embarrassing cash-flow itch. (The authorities noted and traced the license plate on the car, but the student who owned it was absolved when it was certified that he had, at the moment the robbery took place, been afflicted with an examination in the class of a certain economics professor who also happened to be the Dean of Students.)

Those two almost-simultaneous events

brought to an abrupt end the student body's brilliant, chaotically organized parking pattern behind the gym. But in the end it proved impossible to keep a good impulse down, theft and major construction notwithstanding.

In due course, with yet other construction planned on the campus, Washington and Lee determined to provide new parking areas for its students, and hired the best parking-lot designers money could buy. And lo, a new lot, probably the most attractive in Virginia or maybe the world, was opened near Lee Chapel with appropriate fanfare. It was designed to accommodate precisely 68 cars, the number that had been displaced from the old 100-by-200 lot where the gym addition now stands.

The new lot was engineered within an inch of its life. It has nooks and crannies everywhere, bowered with exotic shrubs and trees imported from all over the world—everything to distinguish it in the most emphatic way possible from your garden-variety shopping-center parking lot. And it would hold exactly 68 cars.

For the Colts' W&L, we yell, yell, yell!

For W&L's football Generals, this seems to be what the sportswriters call a "rebuilding year." But even so, there is at least one estimable parallel an optimist can draw.

The Baltimore Colts, who could use a little rebuilding themselves, "have a press-agent's history-making dream," writes John F. Steadman, sports editor of the Baltimore News-American—"Washington & Lee in the same backfield," Joe Washington and Ron Lee. "It lends itself to all kinds of possibilities," Steadman says.

"Washington and Lee University might even take a rooting interest in the Colts, and the way things have been going they can use all the help they can get.

"And then, too, the Colts' band could strike up the 'Washington and Lee Swing'

"Washington and Lee [the University], coincidentally, has the same colors as the Baltimore football team, blue and white

"[Colts] Coach Ted Marchibroda hasn't said anything about trying to schedule W&L because the Colts, in their present state of physical duress, might find they are overmatched" earned his law degree from Georgia. He has taught at the Universities of Wyoming and Puget Sound (Washington state). Henneman, a B.A. graduate of Yale with a law degree from Harvard, has been connected with W&L since 1972, when he became associate director of development in charge of deferred giving programs and an adjunct professor of law. Brion, a B.S. graduate of Northwestern University with a law degree from Virginia, taught previously at William & Mary.

In The College, W&L's undergraduate arts-and-sciences division, new assistant professors are Jean Dunbar in English, Jay B. Labov in biology, David P. Robbins in mathematics and Lee D. Gordon in philosophy.

Dunbar is a B.A. graduate of Kenyon. She received her M.A. degree from Virginia and is a Ph.D. candidate there. Labov is a B.A. graduate of the University of Miami and holds an M.A. from the University of Rhode Island, where he expects to receive his Ph.D. Robbins received his B.A. degree from Harvard and his Ph.D. from Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He came to W&L from Hamilton College, where he was also an assistant professor. Gordon, formerly an assistant philosophy professor at the University of Illinois, has his Ph.D. degree from the University of Texas and received his undergraduate education at Carleton College.

In The School of Commerce, Economics and Politics, new assistant professors are Reginald R. Yancey in accounting and W. David Jones in administration.

Yancey is a B.S. graduate of Virginia State College and received his law degree last spring from W&L. He has been a staff accountant with two firms, and taught accounting on an adjunct basis at W&L last year. Jones is a B.S. graduate of the University of Tennessee and earned his M.B.A. from Augusta College. He is a candidate for the doctorate in business administration at Indiana University.

Also joining the W&L faculty this autumn under a one-year appointment was Arlon K. Kemple, a Ph.D. candidate in political science at the University of North Carolina (Chapel Hill). He will work with teachers and students in economics, sociology and politics, primarily expanding their familiarity with the University's new computer facilities and helping them explore ways the computer can be used to enhance teaching and research opportunities at the undergraduate level. His appointment is sponsored by a grant to W&L from the National Science Foundation under its Comprehensive Assistance to Undergraduate Science Education (CAUSE) program.

The students scoffed at Washington and Lee and its high-powered consultants. Sixty-eight cars! Before anyone knew what happened, they developed their own pattern for parking an average of 98 cars there, almost half again as many as the experts thought they could. And generally they do it without blocking anyone else. (The architects who designed the lot, GWSM Inc., imported all the way from Pittsburgh, are still astonished.) When a student occasionally does block in another, the victim is absolutely sanguine about it, according to Frank A. Parsons, who, as assistant to President Huntley, is in charge of such things. It doesn't happen often, he says, but when it does, the reaction isn't one of hysteria but rather "Okay, maybe I'll block you in tomorrow."

Not long ago, Washington and Lee began still more construction, this time building a new library. And that meant a whole lot of faculty parking had to be eliminated.

Students are used to coping with adversity, but Doctors of Philosophy are another species. They shine in committee meetings, but put them in a real-life parking-lot crisis and you've got trouble with a capital T.

So the University thought—briefly—of changing the new Lee Chapel lot from "B" to "A," from upperclassmen to faculty and staff. But even the high-powered imported parking-lot experts from Pittsburgh had to admit defeat and quash that silly notion. Displace nearly a hundred students in favor of 68 professors, and the consequences would be unimaginable and uncontrollable. If a Ph.D. found his car blocked by a colleague's, he'd be at the dean's doorstep in a trice (considering that he couldn't get there in his Maverick). And where to put the students whose Le Barons had been displaced by a fraction as many faculty Hondas?

So the faculty lost. Students now own and control the new parking lot into which the University frankly admits it wouldn't dare send its agents. Professors park on side streets halfway into the county or, if they are smart, they walk to school and boast about the exercise they're getting. Frank Parsons, the assistant to the president, is one of the brave few who still parks in the new lot—but even he had to abandon his Impala to his wife and daughter, and buy a Rabbit for himself, to get away with it.

HOUSTON. A stag reception was held on May 30 at the home of F. Fox Benton Jr., '60, to give Houston alumni an opportunity to become better acquainted with Benton, one of the newest members of the Washington and Lee Board of Trustees. The following officers were elected: W. B. (Buck) Ogilvie Jr., '64, president; Allen B. Craig III, '68, vice president; Donald B. McFall, '64, '69L, secretary; Richard E. Gray III, '73, treasurer; John S. Anderson, '68, social chairman. Expectations were expressed that this group of officers will keep the Houston chapter among the most active of all W&L alumni groups.

BIRMINGHAM. The chapter joined the Birmingham Museum of Art in being host for the opening reception of the exhibition of the Reeves Collection of Chinese Export Porcelain on June 4. James W. Whitehead, University treasurer and curator of the collection, and Mrs. Whitehead participated in the program.

BALTIMORE. To welcome W&L students home for their summer vacation, the chapter held its annual early summer cocktail party on June 10 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John E. McDonald. The chapter extended special appreciation to the McDonalds for their gracious hospitality and the use of their lovely home.

SAN ANTONIO. The opening of an exhibition of the Louise Herreshoff paintings at the Witt Memorial Museum on June 11 brought together one of the largest gatherings of chapter members and their friends in recent years. James W. Whitehead, University treasurer and curator of the Herreshoff collection, and Mrs. Whitehead were present, and Whitehead gave a lecture on the paintings. Ralph Lehr Jr., '73, chapter president, with the assistance of the museum staff, made the arrangements for this outstanding event.

and Mrs. Steinheimer. An enthusiastic group of alumni were present to hear Dean Steinheimer's up-to-the-minute report on the law school. Also attending were John Hollister, '58, development staff associate, and Farris Hotchkiss, '58, director of development.

GULF STREAM. The University Club in Miami was the setting of an alumni dinner meeting on June 16 in honor of Dean Roy L. Steinheimer of the School of Law and Mrs. Steinheimer. A cocktail reception preceded the excellent dinner. Larry Craig, '66, A. J. Barranco, '64, and Mercer Clarke, '66, were in charge of the arrangements. Those present eagerly received Dean Steinheimer's report on activities of the University. John Hollister, '58, development staff associate, also represented the University. The next day Dean Steinheimer attended a W&L breakfast in connection with the convention of the Florida Bar Association.

WASHINGTON. The chapter's annual reception in honor of incoming W&L freshmen and their parents was held Aug. 9 at the lovely home of Randolph (Ranny) Rouse, '39, in Arlington, Va. A large group of alumni was present to welcome the freshmen. The party, including cocktails and hors d'oeuvres, was staged beside the pool of the Rouse home and was catered by a group of young women. Jay Meriwether, '70, president of the chapter, expressed appreciation to Ranny Rouse and to his mother, Mrs. Parke Rouse, who was also present. The chapter welcomed 40 new W&L students from the area and applauded those attending the reception. Waller T. (Beau) Dudley, a senior law student and president of the student body, extended a special welcome to the students on behalf of the University. University representatives included E. Waller Dudley, '43, '47L, a University trustee; John Duckworth, '71, development staff associate; Buddy Atkins, '68, assistant alumni secretary; and Bill Washburn, '40, alumni secretary.

HARRY E. MEEK, a distinguished Arkansas lawyer, was recently featured in the Arkansas Gazette as a lover of all animals and an author of laws. The 87-year-old attorney has had a varied career and continues active today. He left W&L in 1912 after one year and became a court recorder before entering the Arkansas Law School in 1913. Not satisfied, he again came to W&L and obtained his second law degree in 1915. He practiced in Stuttgart for a while before entering the service from which he was discharged in 1918. After associating with several firms, Meek retired in 1969. He is the attorney for the Arkansas Bank Department, is an avid swimmer, and has several hobbies, including astronomy.

MAJ. M. S. CANNON retired in 1963 in Shelbyville, Tenn., after a long and illustrious teaching career, principally in military schools. After graduation from W&L, he went to Kemper Military Academy in Booneville, Mo. After World War I, Cannon taught at Sewanee Military Academy for three years before taking the headmastership of the Alabama Military Academy in Anniston, where he stayed seven years. Cannon was especially successful in recruiting students and in 1930 joined the faculty at Columbia Military Academy, where he stayed until his retirement. In the spring of 1976 Maj. Cannon was honored at a special homecoming at Columbia Military Academy attended by Gov. Blanton of Tennessee and U.S. Rep. Beard. A personally endorsed picture of President Gerald Ford was presented to him.
