ROTC Climbing Back at W&L

Not so very many years ago ROTC was a four-letter word on most college campuses.

As opposition to the war in Vietnam escalated during the late 1960s and early 1970s, enrollment in the Reserved Officer Training Corps dropped dramatically throughout the country. Washington and Lee was no exception. Like the ROTC programs almost everywhere, W&L's Army ROTC detachment hit bottom during the 1973-74 academic year when only 64 students were enrolled—a 62 percent decline from just three years previously. And consider this: in 1960, nine years after ROTC was established at the University, 364 undergraduates were enrolled in the program. The drop was precipitous indeed.

Today memories of Vietnam have faded. ROTC enrollments nationwide are climbing almost as dramatically as they fell a decade ago, from a low of 33,220 cadets in 1974 to a 1984 level of 72,823. And again, Washington and Lee is no exception.

This fall 192 students are enrolled in the University's program. W&L's ROTC officials expect 24 students to be commissioned as second lieutenants on commencement morning next June. Projections are for those numbers to continue to increase as more and more students gravitate toward the program.

Clearly, ROTC has made an impressive comeback at W&L just as it has throughout the country.

Why the about-face?

For starters, attitudes toward the military have unquestionably improved in the years since anti-Vietnam demonstrations swept the nation's campuses. The mood of the country has shifted perceptibly; there has been an obvious surge in patriotism.

But there are practical reasons for ROTC's return, too: increased tuition costs coupled with the availability of lucrative ROTC scholarships, for one; guaranteed post-graduate employment in an uncertain job market, for another; the prospect of draft registration, for yet another.

"I would like to say that patriotism is the number one reason for the increase in ROTC enrollments nationwide," says Lt. Col. Luke B. Ferguson, professor of military science at W&L. "But while I do believe many of the students become interested out of a sense of duty, I must honestly say the primary reason is probably monetary. Those scholarships are very appealing."

Those scholarships were no less appealing during the mid-1970s, of course. And yet that appeal was not strong enough to offset the negative feelings many students had about the military then.

"Those were black days for ROTC," says Ferguson. "Vietnam was probably the only war we've ever fought that was not supported by the public."

"For me personally it was a very difficult time. I invested two years of my life in Vietnam. I know that by the end of my second tour, I sensed a real concern over the continuing commitment of my own soldiers in the field. It was harder and harder. Being a loyal soldier you did it, but there were many evenings when you did a lot of soul-searching. In that kind of situation, I think you can begin to sense why the public felt as it did."

Many of today's ROTC cadets have only the vaguest memories of Vietnam—memories of the nightly television news reports, perhaps, but little more. And yet, they do sense how different the atmosphere is now.

"Knowing what I do about the atmosphere back then, I can't imagine that I would have been in ROTC had I been in college during Vietnam," admits Bob Tomaso, a senior from Milford, Mass., who is corps executive officer of the W&L detachment this year.

Adds senior Greg Lukanuski of Mechanicsburg, Pa., the detachment commanding officer: "I don't want to say I wouldn't have ended up in ROTC back then, but the social pressures against going ROTC must have been awfully strong."

Perhaps those pressures were not as strong at Washington and Lee as they were elsewhere. ROTC units at some universities were disbanded under pressure from students and faculty. That never happened at W&L, but there was an ongoing debate over ROTC's existence at the University. That debate focused on whether students ought to receive academic credit for their participation in the program with articles in and letters to the Ring-tum Phi arguing both sides of the case.

"The main objection to ROTC among a segment of the faculty was the fact that students received academic credit for a kind of study and learning that many felt was not appropriate to the liberal arts," recalls Louis W. Hodges, professor of religion at W&L.

"There were, at the same time, arguments that certain other kinds of study—physical education, for instance—should not earn credit either. But the argument against ROTC was heightened by the Vietnam War."

On the other side of the debate were those who argued that the presence of ROTC on a campus such as Washington and Lee was not only valid but vitally important.

"That side took the basic view that armies are dangerous, and it is not good for armies to be run altogether by people who have been trained strictly in the military," says Hodges. "It was felt that we would be far better off as a nation to have some liberally-educated military leaders. I suppose you could still hear both sides of that debate on campuses today, but the intensity of the debate was clearly a product of the overall climate of that period."

That debate was one sign of the times. Another sign came at the height of the campus unrest in the spring of 1970 when rumors abounded that anti-war protesters planned to set fire to W&L's ROTC building. Around the country ROTC was a popular target of the war protests. Some ROTC buildings were occupied by protesting students; it never came to that at W&L.

Those days of controversy are long forgotten now. Today uniformed ROTC cadets scarcely warrant a second glance when they walk across the campus. Any comments directed at the cadets nowadays are not so much derisive as facetious.

"Once in a while somebody will salute me or something like that when I'm in uniform,” says Lukanuski. “But it’s really no big deal on the campus. Nobody’s ever called me a fascist or a baby killer because of the uniform.”

“Whenever a helicopter flies over the campus, one of my roommates will warn me to get used to that sound because I’ll be hearing it a lot in a couple of years,” says William E. (Hutch) Hutchinson, a junior member of the ROTC detachment from Providence, R.I.

The atmosphere and the attitudes have changed, to be sure. And in the meantime, ROTC has become an even more attractive alternative from a practical standpoint.

The extensive scholarship program is perhaps the major attraction. Of the 192 Washington and Lee students in ROTC this year, 65 are receiving one of the 16 different varieties of ROTC scholarships, most of which offer full tuition, fees, books, and $100 a month in spending money.

“We have a larger proportion of students on ROTC scholarship than many schools,” notes Ferguson. “The scholarships are awarded on the basis of national competition, and our students tend to do quite well in that competition.”

According to Ferguson, the University received in excess of $195,000 in scholarship monies from the government for a single semester in 1983-84.

“That is a major investment for us, but we think it is an investment well worth making,” says Ferguson, who took over this year from Lt. Col. David F. Fowler.

“I frankly wondered whether the scholarship would make that much difference to students here,” adds Ferguson. “But I’ve found that it does make a difference.”

Take Tomaso, for instance. Four years ago when he began looking at colleges, Tomaso’s father encouraged him to consider the service academies or, if not that, to look into the possibility of an ROTC scholarship.

“It had absolutely no appeal to me,” says Tomaso. “Even when I got to W&L and decided to take the first year of military science, I was not very enthused.

But Col. Fowler wiped out the stereotyped idea I had of the military, the nuts and bolts idea.

“I wound up applying for the scholarship. And I must admit that, to a large extent at least, I did it for the money.”

Tomaso chose one of the scholarships through which he will wind up spending six years in the Army Reserve after finishing law school.

For others, the attraction of ROTC goes beyond the scholarship to the future. While his classmates scramble around this year getting their resumes printed and their interviews lined up, Lukanuski is sitting back and watching. He knows that next fall he’ll be employed by the U.S. Army at the $19,000 entering annual salary of a second lieutenant. With that security, however, comes a commitment to four years of active duty.

"When I first began to consider committing myself to ROTC my father cautioned me to be certain that I wanted to put in those four years," said Lukanuski. "I really did think long and hard about that.

"I am not under the pressure that some of my classmates are to find a job. My goal is to end up as a military intelligence officer stationed in West Germany. I want to spend whatever free time I have traveling around Europe. If I'm going to be in the Army, I want to see all I can see."

In its recruitment campaign, ROTC emphasizes positive aspects of that four-year commitment, selling potential cadets on the fact that they will leave the Army with more marketable skills than they possessed when they entered.

"During my four years of active duty, I will increase my qualifications," says Hutchinson. "I think that I'll come out of the service ahead of my classmates in terms of experience. That should help me find a position that I want."

Is ROTC a valid career move? Michael Cappeto is the director of career placement at W&L. He does not hesitate to recommend ROTC to students with an interest in the military.

"It is my personal feeling that we need more liberally-educated people in the military rather than relying solely on the leadership of people who have spent four years training specifically for the military," says Cappeto. "I find that is not different at all from my belief that we need more liberally educated people in business. From that standpoint, ROTC does represent a valid option for some students."

Another practical reason more students are opting for ROTC involves the reinstitution of draft registration. That, says Ferguson, has been a factor in increased enrollments since students can eliminate the threat of having their careers interrupted.

"I remember one of the first questions I was asked by a prospective employer out of college was whether I had served in the military," says Ferguson. "There was the understandable concern then that a company didn't want to train you only to lose you to military service. ROTC allows the student to exercise control over the situation."

There are various other reasons students choose to participate in ROTC. Some see it as an adventure, a challenge.

"We do have students who are excited about the fact that they're going into a situation that is not routine, that they'll change jobs every two or three years," says Ferguson.

"And there are others who naturally gravitate toward the military because of family influences in that direction."

For whatever reason they choose ROTC, Ferguson finds the students come from an increasingly wide variety of backgrounds and bring an equally wide variety of viewpoints.

"I've been interested in coming up with a model of a prospective ROTC cadet at Washington and Lee," says Ferguson. "And what I have found is that we have an excellent cross section here. In the senior class, for instance, we've probably got less than 10 percent from military families. That our students come from the whole range of backgrounds is, I think, important to the program."

But though they come to ROTC from different directions, W&L's ROTC students seem to be headed in similar directions. Most, according to Ferguson, are considering military intelligence while the second most popular post-graduate choice involves delaying active duty for law school and then entering the military as attorneys.

Ferguson acknowledges that the ROTC program's primary responsibility is to produce quality officers. He insists that is particularly critical given the complexities of today's military.

"It takes a different breed of officer to come in and lead a military unit today," he offers. "We have become so complex in our weapons systems and in our leadership dynamics that we must have officers who are able to handle these situations. More than ever we need to have leaders from schools such as Washington and Lee."

With the Army officer corps today, 75 percent received their commissions from the ROTC while the others were commissioned from West Point or Army officer candidate schools.

Not all of the W&L students who participate in ROTC are in the program for four full years. Indeed, the majority of the cadets are not headed toward the military commitment. For some, maybe even most, ROTC offers a chance to see, if only in a cursory way, what the military is all about—and the opportunity to get academic credits in the process.

The ROTC program is divided into two parts—the basic course and the advanced course. The basic course is for freshmen and sophomores. Worth five credit hours altogether, it introduces the students to management principles, national defense, military history, leadership development, and military courtesy, discipline, and customs.

The advanced course covers the final two years and includes a six-week advanced camp at Ft. Bragg, N.C. Instruction in that segment involves advanced leadership development, group dynamics, organization, and management, small unit tactics and administration, and the practical leadership that comes with assigning students as cadet officers.

Ferguson suggests that even instructing students who will not move beyond the basic course represents an important service not just to the University but to the public at large.

"I am not so naive as to believe the military is for everybody," Ferguson says. "But I do think that everyone needs to be aware of what the military is all about.

"I have an obligation, as does every other military officer, to educate the public. After all, we do work for the public. And I see ROTC as an excellent place to do that. Even if a student doesn't remain in the program the full four years, we've still done a service because we've educated that student on how the system works—some of the values, some of the traditions, some of the professional ethics. I think that is really important."

Ten years ago arguments raged over whether the purpose of ROTC was not antithetical to the avowed purposes of college education. For his part, Ferguson believes that W&L's ROTC program operates within the University's overall educational goals.

"We realize that education is primarily preparing a student for the decision-making process. We hope we're preparing these students to step out and lead," says Ferguson. "We counsel our students continuously. It is a requirement that every semester, the instructors sit down with each student. We strive to foster the same close student-professor relationship that is so crucial to the atmosphere of this University. We think we do belong."

And though they may have been drawn to the program for very practical reasons, many of the W&L cadets find that ROTC can complement the other facets of their educational experience.

"My participation in ROTC hasn't changed my philosophy at all in the sense that I'm still against killing people," Tomaso says. "But ROTC has instilled in me a sense of discipline.

W&L's ROTC detachment in formation

"I think it's important to note that you don't necessarily have to be a gung-ho military type to be in ROTC or to derive benefit from it. After all, I'm a member of ROTC and a member of the Frisbee Club at the same time."

Lukanuski credits his ROTC experience with improving his classroom work, particularly in the sense of helping him to mature.

"When I attended summer Advanced Camp at Fort Bragg, I was forced to realize that the time is coming, sooner than I might want to admit, when I'll be out on my own," said Lukanuski. "There is the tendency in college to take things less seriously because you know you're still a kid, that the line between student and adult is there. This experience has forced me to cross that line before some of my classmates. And because of that I tend to take my school work more seriously now."

Most of the ROTC students look upon the program as one form of extracurricular activity and contend that it does not intrude on their time even on those occasions when they are off on an overnight field training exercise.

"I actually look forward to those overnights once a semester," says Hutchinson. "It is good to get away from the campus occasionally. It doesn't take up any of my study time. In fact, it might help me organize my time a bit better."

Some ROTC students are more actively involved than others, taking advantage of the voluntary Ranger program which provides more field training opportunities.

Ferguson believes the interest will continue to grow for ROTC and expects the unit to benefit next year when the University's first women undergraduates arrive.

"Coeducation will have a very positive effect on ROTC here," says Ferguson. "Actually, we have been coeducational in a sense for several years since we have a cross enrollment with Lynchburg College, Liberty Baptist College, Hollins, and Randolph-Macon Woman's College. We have had several women participate in various aspects of the program.

"We are very excited about the prospect of women members of ROTC. Across the board a large number of the Army's female officers come from ROTC."

Ferguson is confident the popularity of ROTC will continue to increase and that the W&L detachment will produce more officers in the years ahead.

"Although I have a quota to produce a certain number of second lieutenants each year, I make only one promise: that I will produce quality lieutenants," says Ferguson. "That, I think, is the value of ROTC. And I think it is particularly valuable given the quality of the officers Washington and Lee has produced and will undoubtedly continue to produce."

Returning to His Roots

John Elrod moves in as Dean of the College

Though Einstein, God, and an Iowa State physicist combined to bring John Elrod to Washington and Lee in the first place, something more akin to fate seemed to be at work to bring him back.

It was in February of 1983 that Elrod paid his first visit to W&L. At the time, he was chairman of the department of philosophy at Iowa State University in Ames.

Under a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities, Elrod and a high energy physicist on the Iowa State faculty had collaborated on a study of Einstein's scientific, ethical, and religious views. That study formed the basis for a lecture entitled "Einstein and God" which Elrod was invited to deliver under the auspices of W&L's Howerton Fund in Religion.

Elrod had not set foot on the Washington and Lee campus before he came to lecture. He remembers distinctly that he liked what he found.

"I guess my reaction was like that of most everyone else who comes here for the first time," recalls Elrod. "I was awfully impressed with the beauty of the campus and the congeniality of the faculty and the quality of the students. I just had a very positive experience."

The converse was true as well. Those who had the opportunity to hear Elrod's lecture or to meet with him during the visit were as impressed with him as he was with the University.

Less than nine weeks after Elrod's lecture, William J. Watt announced he was stepping down as Dean of the College at Washington and Lee.

The search for Watt's successor had just begun when someone suggested that the Iowa State philosopher who had lectured on Einstein and God would be a strong candidate. So John Elrod's name was quickly added to the list of candidates. Ultimately Elrod's name wound up at the top of that list. And on August 1, he took over as Dean of the College.

The proximity of Elrod's first visit and Watt's announcement seemed providential, to be sure. But there was even more to the timing than was immediately evident.

Not long before he became a candidate at W&L, Elrod had begun to grow restless at Iowa State.

For one thing, he and his wife, Mimi, are both Southerners—Georgians, to be precise. They had lived in the Midwest for 15 years and in New York City for six years before that.

"We had begun to think seriously about coming home to the South," says Elrod, whose soft Georgia accent has managed to survive the years in Iowa. "We both had some very strong attractions to our roots."

Those roots were not just geographic, however; they were educational as well. Though he had spent his entire teaching career at Iowa State (a university with about 25,000 students), Elrod had received his undergraduate education at South Carolina's Presbyterian College (a school that currently has an enrollment of 950). He retained vivid memories, positive memories, of his undergraduate experience. And perhaps those memories had, in part at least, led to his increasing frustrations with education in the state university setting.

"Though I certainly had a mostly positive experience throughout my years at Iowa State, I was frustrated in the sense that I found it extremely difficult to make changes," says Elrod, who had joined the Iowa State faculty in 1971 after earning his Ph.D. in the philosophy of religion from Columbia University.

"I found the whole educational enterprise at Iowa State highly politicized. People were fighting for a piece of the requirement pie," he says. "I found it very difficult to get anyone to think pedagogically and philosophically about what we ought to be doing."

"For better or worse, I think it is perceived in state universities that the main survival mechanism is students. If you don't draw students, you just don't keep going. And that doesn't create a cooperative atmosphere. There is a tremendous competitiveness for the student and for the dollar."

So it was that when Elrod received a letter from Washington and Lee informing him of the vacant deanship and inviting his application, he immediately recognized the potential of returning to his roots—the South, on the one hand, and a small liberal arts setting, on the other.

"When this opportunity came along I thought maybe if I find myself in an academic environment where departmental lines don't mean quite as much as they do in a big university and where faculty are accustomed to talking with each other over departmental fences and where there is a lot of interdisciplinary teaching going on, then it might be more possible for faculty to work as a single unit. It might be possible for faculty to sit down in a disinterested way and try to figure out what we ought to do to educate coming generations of students."

"Having been here at Washington and Lee, even for a brief time, my expectations have not been frustrated at all. I do find what I thought I would."

In the back of his mind, John Elrod had always thought he might one day teach on the college level. ("I liked the ivory tower character of it," he says.) Fact is, he had intended to head straight in that direction after he graduated from Presbyterian. His plan was to pursue a graduate degree in English literature at Vanderbilt.

"... my expectations have not been frustrated at all."

But the summer before he was to enroll at Vanderbilt, Elrod took a summer job as youth minister of a large Presbyterian church in suburban Atlanta. He never made it to Vanderbilt. Three years later he was still working at that summer job and found himself being pulled in an altogether different direction, toward the parish ministry.

When he finally began his graduate studies in 1965, it was not at Vanderbilt but at Union Theological Seminary in New York. After one semester at Union, he changed directions again, this time merely walking across the street to Columbia University and entering the graduate program in an area called philosophy of religion.

"I realized at that time that there were issues and questions and problems that I had running around in my head which could only be dealt with by going on into philosophy and theology," Elrod says.

During his second year at Columbia, Elrod's future course took yet another turn when he took a course entitled "Kierkegaard and His Contemporaries"—a course that examined the people who had influenced 19th-century Danish theologian Soren Kierkegaard, the man many consider the father of existentialism.

"There was an immediate understanding between me and Kierkegaard," says Elrod. "I knew right then that I was going to spend a lot of time with him."

Indeed, he did. Indeed, he has. Today Elrod is generally acknowledged as one of the leading authorities on Kierkegaard. He is the author of two major works on the philosopher—Being and Existence in Kierkegaard's Pseudonymous Works (1975) and Kierkegaard and Christendom (1981) and is in the process of finishing a third, this one a biography. He has written numerous articles about Kierkegaard for professional journals. He serves on the international advisory board for a new uniform translation into English of Kierkegaard's collected works.

"I find that students really resonate to [the] understanding of life that is evident in Kierkegaard."

Though Elrod stops short of saying that he embraces Kierkegaard's philosophies, he readily confesses that his thinking has been shaped in large measure by 15 years of studying Kierkegaard.

"Kierkegaard believed there were three fundamental life orientations: a life lived according to pleasure, a life lived according to duty, and a life of faith," explains Elrod. "He believed the most important thing in life was for each individual to choose one of those orientations and not just inadvertently end up in one."

"He believed that, in the final analysis, the most important thing that a human being could do is to choose how he or she is going to live their life. And he wrote in such a way as to try to awaken people to these possibilities in life and to encourage them to make a choice."

As Elrod notes, the idea of exercising control over your future rather than allowing outside forces to chart the course for you is particularly intriguing for college students.

"I find that students really resonate to this understanding of life that is evident in Kierkegaard," he says. "They are at a point where they sense it is important that decisions be made and they sense the number of pressures pushing them this way and that, and they like the idea of stopping and taking some time to think about what is really important. They like the idea of trying to take control of your life and to choose a direction in which you want to go rather than choosing a direction because your parents want you to do it or because society is pushing this way."

When he began teaching at Iowa State 13 years ago, Elrod discovered students were eager to pursue courses in philosophy, not just Kierkegaard. At first blush it may seem rather odd to find a Kierkegaard authority on the faculty at Iowa State University or to find such a strong philosophy department existing alongside such traditionally strong programs as engineering and veterinary science. Indeed, Elrod recalls that many among those future engineers and veterinarians steered clear of the philosophy classrooms and considered such topics "little more than fluff."

"In the early 1960s many of the large land grant universities were trying to broaden their programs, and that was certainly true at Iowa State," notes Elrod. "It was a very good time for universities to do that from the standpoint of the humanities because it was a counter-cultural period and this was driving some of our best undergraduates in the direction of the humanities and graduate study. And, of course, they wanted to continue the revolution on a faculty side rather than the student side."

"When I got to Iowa State, the counter-cultural interest of students was still very high so we had good students and lots of students studying both philosophy and religion simply because they were looking for something else."

"They were looking for a way of life different from the one they were rebelling against on the college campuses across the country. So you had the natural inclination of students to take these courses."

During Elrod's tenure at Iowa State, including five years as chairman of the philosophy department, the department grew in size and quality. So, too, did Elrod's frustrations grow.

"If you get people just voting their political interests, it doesn't always work out for the best educationally," Elrod observes. "You have to think more not only in terms of your interests, but in terms of the final product you're trying to put out—the educated student. That requires you to think about this process in terms much larger than your own very specific interests."

Were he to write the job description for Dean of the College, John Elrod would make it brief: "The role of the Dean is to help the faculty do its job," he says.

If only the task were as simple as the job description sounds.

Elrod makes it plain that his very first assignment upon taking up the deanship at W&L has been to learn how things are done in a small school in general and at Washington and Lee in particular.

His own educational process began shortly after he arrived in August and visited each of W&L's department heads to get a sense of the departments. When classes commenced in September, he started another round of visits, this time to each professor in the College.

"This is learning time. I want to hear how the faculty think things are going. I want to tell each one individually what I think is important," Elrod says.

And what exactly is it that John Elrod thinks is important? It is this: the faculty of a university, any university, must be constantly growing professionally.

"I think it is the dean's responsibility to see that they are doing that," he says. "I think it is the dean's responsibility to make sure the faculty are doing the very best they can do in the classroom, too."

Those are the dean's responsibilities. But how are they achieved? That is what Elrod is striving to determine.

"I know how these things are done in a state university; that's clear as a bell to me," he says. "At Iowa State, we had fairly elaborate procedures to evaluate a person's teaching. That included peer evaluations and student evaluations and alumni evaluations. We also evaluated the quality of the faculty member's research by having experts in their fields look at that work. That's scary stuff."

"The role of the dean is to help the faculty do its job."

"But the central purpose of evaluation is the positive one of helping the faculty members improve. You can't improve unless you've got some kind of objective feedback on where you are now and what you might do to make yourself better. Every faculty member can be better."

For Elrod, one of the principal ways a teacher can improve is to continue to grow professionally, "to stay intellectually alive in his or her discipline."

An avid tennis player, it is only natural that Elrod uses that sport to illustrate his point. "I don't think the best tennis teacher is always going to be the person who's best at the game. Connors and McEnroe may be terrible teachers. We have outstanding researchers who are terrible teachers. But you want anybody who's teaching you how to play tennis to know how to play the game. They need not play it perfectly or better than anybody else. But they should know how to play it and should be continuing over a period of time to try to refine their own game."

"I want my own children to be taught by faculty members who are, in ways appropriate to their abilities and interests, trying to do themselves what they're teaching the students."

None of this should be interpreted as a doctrine of publish or perish, however. Elrod is quick to observe that Washington and Lee's stated mission is that of a teaching university.

"When we emphasize, as we properly do, that what is distinctive about Washington and Lee is the personal attention individual students receive from their instructors, that means you just aren't going to have the research output and productivity you're going to have in a research institution," he says.

"But you don't want that. It's unrealistic and counterproductive to expect that of our faculty here."

"At the same time, you don't want a faculty member who does nothing but meet his classes, either. I think those extremes are disastrous. We need to aim somewhere in-between. But what comes first is being prepared to teach our students well and giving them the attention and the time that they deserve. That, after all, is why they've come here, to get the personal attention of a strong faculty."

From the time he was first contacted about the vacant deanship at W&L until he actually accepted the position, John Elrod read everything he could find about the University. He read what the University said about itself; he read what others said about the University.

Among his conclusions was the strong belief that he could not have come to Washington and Lee at a more exciting time in the University's history.

"We have at this University outstanding resources, an exceptional faculty, unmatched facilities, a strong and loyal alumni body, and an outstanding man at the top in John Wilson," says Elrod.

"With those elements going for us, I see no reason why Washington and Lee cannot move forward to become one of the most distinguished national liberal arts colleges in the country."

Homecoming '84

W&L's 1934 Southern Football Champions Receive a Warm Welcome Home

Fifty years ago this fall Washington and Lee made football history by winning its first Southern Conference championship.

On a sun-drenched Saturday in mid-October those feats of a half-decade ago were brought briefly back to life as members of that 1934 team returned to the campus on Homecoming to celebrate the 50th anniversary of their championship season.

They had much to celebrate, indeed. The 1934 Generals compiled a 7-3 record which included victories over Kentucky, Maryland, Virginia Tech, Virginia, William and Mary, and South Carolina. Impressive as those victories were, however, it may have been a heartbreaking 14-12 loss to Princeton that brought Washington and Lee's team its highest praise and provided the team members with many of their most vivid memories.

And yet, the greatest tribute of all may have come 50 years later when the Wilson Field crowd welcomed the champions home.

Members of the '34 team began the afternoon by serving as honorary captains for the 1984 Generals. While they waited to walk to mid-field for the coin toss prior to the game against Hampden-Sydney, John F. McFadden Jr., '36, playfully warned the current Generals to "take a good look at us because this is the way you'll look 50 years from now."

For the record, the '34 team retained its Wilson Field magic—the Generals won the coin toss!

Most in the Homecoming crowd at Wilson Field had not even been born when the 1934 team captured its championship. That did not diminish their appreciation of the achievement. And the crowd demonstrated its appreciation with a long, loud ovation that provided an electric moment when the returning players were introduced at halftime.

The returning players were special guests at a banquet in their honor that evening and had plenty of opportunity to swap stories.

All the salutes to the '34 team did not end there, however. One member of that 1934 team who could not be present for the festivities was Joe Arnold of Versailles, Ky. But Arnold did write a letter to his returning teammates and told them of a yearling thoroughbred colt he owns. "If the colt appears to have real quality," wrote Arnold, "I will name him '34 Champs."

In addition to the reunion of the 1934 team, the weekend's Homecoming activities featured a pre-game picnic sponsored by the Alumni Association.

The 1984 Homecoming Queen was Kathleen Plante, a junior at Hollins College who is attending W&L this fall under the Seven-College Exchange program. She was sponsored by Pi Kappa Alpha.

Another major event over Homecoming weekend was a sneak preview of the University's new Student Pavilion. Although considerable work remained on the structure, it received a baptism of fire when a crowd estimated at 2,200 jammed the facility on Friday evening to hear a concert by The Spinners. Two days later the Homecoming festivities ended with another Pavilion concert, featuring Eight to the Bar.

The Osmosis Method Of Teaching Acting

Irish Professional Actor
Jarlath Conroy
Spends a Month at W&L

When the Washington and Lee University Theatre presented Sean O'Casey's Juno and the Paycock as its first production of the 1984-85 season, it was quite apparent that the actors and actresses had worked overtime to perfect their Irish accents.

For at least one of the cast members, however, the accent came quite naturally. That was understandable. The actor in question, Jarlath Conroy, was born in County Galway, Ireland. His accent is genuine. And so is his acting.

Conroy is a professional actor with some impressive Broadway and film credits. He spent the month of October on the Washington and Lee campus as the Glasgow Actor-in-Residence. In addition to teaching an acting class and lecturing to several other classes, Conroy played the lead role of Captain Boyle in Juno and the Paycock.

For his fellow cast members, Conroy's very presence on the stage provided an invaluable learning experience.

"Playing opposite Jarlath is akin to playing tennis against an opponent who is better than you are—you aren't going to win the match, but you're going to learn some things and you're going to become a better player, or actor in this case," said W&L drama professor Albert C. Gordon, who shared several of the play's most memorable scenes with Conroy.

The learning experience worked both ways, according to Conroy.

"There is a kind of selfish reason in my coming here as an actor-in-residence," Conroy explained. "I like to learn, too. I think just in doing my work and relating to other people that I learn a great deal.

"For instance, I learn about what I'm capable of in terms of dealing with myself, with my own irritations, in a situation like this. On another level I learn what I can do in a performance, what depends on me, whether I can come up with it or not."

Though Conroy instructed W&L students twice a week in a formal acting class, he agreed that much of the best instruction took place on the stage, both in rehearsals and performances.

Conroy presents an O'Casey reading.

"In terms of what I like to achieve in relation to the people I'm working with, I like to set a reasonable example without being too severe about it. I think that is the way the students learn. I think they learn from osmosis in this situation where there is an artist in residence," said Conroy.

"A lot of the work I'm here to do was done during the rehearsal for the play. It's in that process that one learns. Of course, one learns still more in the performance situation. That is a new level, and there are new situations."

Conroy admitted that leaving the Broadway stage and its professionalism for a university theatre can sometimes be frustrating.

"But to me professionalism has got to do with a mental attitude. People can be professional in this situation just as people can be totally amateurish in the so-called professional situation," he said. "Obviously, if one finds people who take their work seriously, it's an added bonus. Certainly the people here approached this production with quite a degree of professionalism.

"I would expect to find that degree of professionalism, though, since any theatre department that goes so far as to invite in a guest artist has probably achieved a level of discipline and approach to the craft already."

"People can be professional in this situation just as people can be totally amateurish in the so-called professional situation."

By the time Juno and the Paycock opened in late October, the cast had had four weeks of rehearsals. That, said Conroy, was time enough to create a first-rate production.

"I have seen a group of people come together who basically did not know each other and do a play in two weeks," he said. "It really depends upon the people working and what they want to bring to it and what allowances they're prepared to make for each other's personalities. Usually in a short period of time you don't have the opportunity to work out personality differences, so if there is a little bit of give all around on that level, then people can get on with the work."

For their part, the cast members found Conroy more than willing to make adjustments to the situation.

"I never saw any sign of temper, and he was never condescending in any shape or form to the rest of us," said Helena Roller, manager of the W&L Book Store who played Juno opposite Conroy's Captain Boyle.

"It was an incredible experience for me. Jarlath is such a master, very patient, very meticulous."

W&L junior Chris Carmouche of Gary, Ind., was Conroy's understudy for Juno and the Paycock. Carmouche had the opportunity to take over the role of Captain Boyle for a special production of the play on Parents' Weekend after Conroy had left.

"My interpretation of the role was somewhat different from his, but it was unquestionably a great help for me to watch Jarlath on the stage," said Carmouche. "Not only did I learn by watching the things he did during rehearsals, but just being around him gave me a sense of the professional attitude that an actor must possess."

According to Gordon, Conroy was the first visiting actor-in-residence for the University Theatre although in years past the theatre has had the benefit of visiting directors and was also host to a troupe of Polish mimes.

"Other college theatres take advantage of this opportunity on a fairly regular basis," said Gordon. "It is often difficult to arrange because of scheduling and satisfying conditions of the actors' union.

"We were especially grateful that the Glasgow Endowment Fund could use its resources to bring Jarlath here."

Conroy's visit was, in large measure, a product of his long-standing relationship with Joseph Martinez, assistant professor of drama at W&L.

Conroy and Martinez, who directed Juno and the Paycock, were classmates at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts in London.

"Although Joseph and I have never worked together, we have always kept in touch with each other and with each other's professional progress," said Conroy.

For Conroy, that progress has meant parts in The Elephant Man, both on Broadway and on national television, as well as a role in the movie Heaven's Gate.

And though his Irish accent clearly came in handy for a Sean O'Casey play such as Juno and the Paycock, Conroy does admit that the Irish brogue can occasionally be a drawback in his career.

"In New York I have become typecast as an Irish actor. I'm working to get away from that," he explained. "There are some casting people who want to depart from that while there are others who will not consider you for anything else."

"I personally find it almost racial. I don't want to be penalized for it. There are a lot of other very good plays out there that are not just Irish."

"The lectures were excellent, the discussions stimulating, and the food altogether too delicious. The gracious adaptation of the Alumni College to so many people of diverse personality and backgrounds is remarkable."

So enthused one of the 179 alumni, spouses, and children who attended the three W&L Alumni Colleges in 1984. They came from far and wide—California, Connecticut, Washington (state), Texas, Louisiana, Iowa, Colorado—to enjoy week-long seminars on topics as diverse as "Society and the Media," "Elizabethan England," and "Scientific Frontiers." And many were back for their second or third Alumni College session. One couple, Robert and Giddy Dyer of Chicago, attended all three 1984 programs. How good can the food be?

"The Alumni College has really caught on at W&L," says Rob Fure, director of summer programs, "and we're delighted by the enthusiasm of our alumni and faculty alike. It's gratifying to see people from all walks of life coming together so happily over books and issues. The wisdom, curiosity, and good humor of our participants are truly inspiring. They've helped to make our summer campus a lively, busy place."

Highlights of Alumni College '84 included guest appearances by NBC's Roger Mudd, Washington correspondent Charles McDowell, Hollywood's Stan Kamen, and Pulitzer Prize-winning poet Howard Nemerov. Participants also enjoyed films, plays, and musical performances in addition to lectures by the faculty on readings ranging from Shakespeare to Lewis Thomas. "But the real highlight of the Alumni College experience," says Tom Nye, head of the biology department and director of last summer's "Scientific Frontiers," "has been and continues to be the participants themselves. Their receptiveness to new ideas and willingness to share their own thoughts and experiences make the Alumni College not simply another teaching experience but a learning experience for all."

Fure reports that since the Alumni College's inaugural session in 1982 enrollment has tripled. "Already we're looking ahead to next summer. The faculty, again a mixture of junior and senior professors, have begun meeting to plan another fine series of programs. We expect to have our 1985 Alumni College brochure in the mail to all alumni and parents of current students in early February."

(June 30-July 6) will be entitled "Great Writers, Etc." Participants will have an opportunity to take a week-long course on either Mark Twain, recent Latin American Nobel Laureate Gabriel Garcia Marquez, or selected short works by three Russian novelists. Alumni collegians will also select a second course on either Baroque music, Grecian vases, or great painters. Those wishing to spend their afternoons on campus will be able to attend workshops in the W&L art studio or the Reeves Center for Research and Exhibition of Porcelain and Paintings.

Alumni College No. 2 will focus on modern health care, its abundant promises and problems. "Society and Health" (July 7-13) will examine several of the difficult issues posed by recent advances in medical technology. Joining Tom Nye as faculty for the program will be Louis W. Hodges, professor of religion and director of W&L's Society and the Professions, and Leonard E. Jarrard, head of the psychology department and a widely published authority on brain research.

"Classical Athens" (July 14-20), with Professors Harrison J. Pemberton, I. Taylor Sanders, and Herman W. Taylor, will conclude the three consecutive weeks of Alumni Colleges in 1985. Following a week-long introduction to the history and culture of ancient Greece next summer, participants will have the opportunity to join the faculty for a tour of Greece in 1986.

Following up on last summer's first international program, the "Elizabethan England" faculty have arranged an itinerary and reserved tours, theatre, and first-class accommodations for W&L's inaugural Alumni College Abroad session (August 6-23). Experienced English scholar-travelers, Professors John M. Evans, Taylor Sanders, and Pamela H. Simpson, expect to join 40 participants for a 16-day excursion to London, Stratford, Oxford, and several Elizabethan houses. Participants in the 1984 program will have first crack at the limited number of available spaces.

"Two of the 1985 programs will be quite new experiences for us," says Fure. "The Alumni College Abroad, which we're very excited about, and the 'Great Writers, Etc.' program, which will give us a chance to involve more W&L faculty than ever before, are important innovations. We are also adopting a consecutive week schedule to accommodate those who want to attend more than one program. And 1985 will bring our first graduating class of Alumni College seniors—participants for four consecutive years. After that it's graduate school, I guess."

Asked if he thinks the Alumni College will soon outgrow its size, Fure responds, "We already have more faculty eager to teach in the Alumni College than we can employ. We'll continue to limit our enrollment to 75 adults per session in order to assure the personal attention that is, after all, essential to the W&L experience. We won't get crowded, just busier."

"We do hope more families will bring their children in 1985. We have an excellent junior program that keeps the children from six to 16 happily occupied each day and evening. Young or old, everyone qualifies for admission to the W&L Alumni College. And everyone benefits. It's a good way for children to see W&L for the first time and for adults to keep us on our toes."

Dick Miller Captures No. 200

Cross Country Wins
ODAC Title,
Another Winning Season
in Football

Cross country coach
Dick Miller

When long-time Washington and Lee cross country coach Dick Miller earned his 200th career victory midway through the season, there was little fanfare to herald his achievement. It seems cross country coaches, like cross country runners, get little attention outside their circle of friends.

Three weeks later, though, Miller received his just due. After he guided the Generals to a 14-0 regular season record and the championship of the Old Dominion Athletic Conference his colleagues selected him as ODAC's Coach of the Year for the second time in three years.

"I am flattered by the award and very proud of the 200 wins, but I must give the credit to the runners I've been privileged to coach," says Miller, who has been coaching the harriers for 33 years.

"Success in cross country stems from individual motivation. There is little spectator interest and a coach sees almost nothing of what the runners do out on the course in meets and in practice. Therefore, the runners must motivate themselves and work hard daily. They must discipline their minds and bodies. I've been fortunate enough to coach individuals who have had that discipline. I'm very proud of them."

Miller is equally proud of the way his runners perform in the classroom and, eventually, in the business world. He credits their success to the same determination they exhibited on the cross country trails.

"Almost all of my runners have been successful students and went on to be productive people in their communities," he says. "I cannot attribute it solely to their cross country experience, but I believe that while competing as runners they learned some valuable lessons. In cross country you don't have teammates to support you if you make a mistake. You are responsible for the way you finish as an individual, which is what it's like in the real world, to a large degree."

Having reached the 200-win plateau, Miller has another major assignment to tackle—starting W&L's women's cross country program. "I don't know what to expect, but if the women who enter next fall want to run they have a place on our team. It may be difficult to find team competition because few schools have women's teams, but they will be given every opportunity to compete," says Miller.

Miller is bound to make the athletic experience of Washington and Lee's undergraduate women as rewarding as he has for the men over the past 33 years. Miller was head wrestling coach for 19 years and spent brief stints as head coach of the track and tennis teams. Collectively, he has coached W&L athletes in more than 500 contests, winning over 300 of those. He is also associate athletic director.

Miller has no regrets, just fond memories. "I mostly remember individuals, not teams. I've had the opportunity to coach some interesting individuals. I've had success but mostly a lot of fun. I'm very happy with what I am doing. W&L has given me the versatility and freedom to achieve my goals."

His goal this year was to win the ODAC Championship and take his team to the national championship in Delaware, Ohio, on Nov. 17. Thus far he has reached his first goal, when W&L literally ran away with the team conference title. The Generals, led by junior Eddie Goundry and senior Frank Pittman, who finished second and third respectively, placed five runners in the top 16. Second-place Lynchburg finished 11 points behind W&L. Goundry, Pittman, and Ted Myers, who finished sixth, earned All-ODAC honors.

Dick Miller and his cross country runners were not the only successful Generals this fall. The football team won its last four games and finished with a 6-4 record (2-3 in ODAC), marking W&L's fifth consecutive winning season. The last time that feat was accomplished was 1919 through 1924.

The turn-around was sparked by sophomores Jon Thornton and Kevin Weaver, who seemed to inspire their teammates late in the season. Thornton became the starting quarterback in the fifth game and his strong, accurate throwing enlivened W&L's offense. He ended the year as the ODAC second-rated quarterback behind Randolph-Macon signal-caller Cody Dearing, who happened to be the top-ranked Division III passer in the nation.

Weaver, a throwback to the two-way player of yesteryear, started the season as a backup tailback to Honorable Mention All-America Gene Girard. When injuries decimated W&L's linebacking corps, he was asked to add that position to his duties. He handled both assignments the way football is supposed to be played. On defense he became W&L's answer to pro football's Lawrence Taylor. He was the Generals' big play man, leading the team in quarterback sacks despite the fact that he did not play linebacker until the third game of the season. On offense he produced every time he ran with the ball. In W&L's 24-14 win over Maryville, he scored the only two times he touched the ball, in a game in which he also led the team in tackles.

"I am very proud of the way we came back to win those last four games," says head coach Gary Fallon, the architect of W&L's football resurgence. "We could have cashed it in and given up after some things did not go right for us early in the year, but our players showed a lot of class."

While the W&L water polo team was unsuccessful in its bid to win a fourth consecutive Southern League title, it is guaranteed a winning record for the seventh straight year. The Generals were 18-11-1 going into the Eastern Championships at West Point in mid-November.

Senior Bobby Pearson, who became the University's first water polo player to be part of 100 victories, and junior Tim Stanford were W&L's most consistent players.

"Losing the league crown was disappointing," says aquatics coach Page Remillard. "But I am proud of the way we played this year. We lost two All-Americans to graduation, and we played some people who had very little experience. I was pleased with the way we developed and grew as a team."

W&L's soccer team had an up and down season, winning some "big" games, but losing other important contests, enroute to a 6-8 year (3-2 in the ODAC). Facing one of the region's most difficult schedules, the Generals lost senior midfielder Mark Sullivan for the last third of the season with a fractured foot.

Junior Bill Holmes had five goals and three assists to lead the W&L scoring while freshman Chris Gareis had moments of brilliance in the goal.

DuBose, Hipp Elected New Trustees

Trustees Clarke, Leggett, Philpott Retire from the Board

Washington and Lee has announced the election of two new members to its Board of Trustees.

Beverly M. (Bo) DuBose III, '62, of Atlanta, Ga., and W. Hayne Hipp, '62, of Greenville, S.C., were elected to six-year terms on the Board, effective January 1, 1985.

The election of DuBose and Hipp came during the fall meeting of the Trustees in Lexington. At the same meeting three Trustees who retired from the Board were recognized for their outstanding service to the University and were elected to emeritus status. The three are T. Hal Clarke, '38, of Atlanta; H. Gordon Leggett Jr., '54, of Lynchburg; and James A. Philpott, '45, of Lexington, N.C.

In other action, the Board elected James M. Ballengee of Radford, Pa., to another three-year term as Rector.

DuBose is a founding partner of the DuBose-Jones Company, a real estate firm in Atlanta. He received his bachelor of science degree in commerce from Washington and Lee in 1962. While at W&L, he was president of the Commerce Fraternity, president of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, and vice-president of the senior class. He was elected to Beta Gamma Sigma, the honor fraternity in business administration.

Following his graduation, DuBose attended Navy Officer Candidate School in Newport, R. I. He served on active duty with the Navy from 1962 to 1965, leaving with the rank of lieutenant. He was national field sales manager for the Atlanta Stove Works from 1965 until 1977 when he and W&L classmate Louis L. Jones III, '62, formed the DuBose-Jones Company.

He is also president of Waterford, a company involved in the recruitment of executives for the banking industry. He is on the board of Seydel International, is a member of the Piedmont Driving Club, and is president of the Benedicts.

Active as an alumnus of the University, he has served as president of W&L's Atlanta Alumni Chapter and was one of the founders of the annual Lee Day Par-

The University Report 1983-84

Muchas Gracias from the President

I spent a recent evening with the annual Report of the Registrar (1983). Some would find it rather dull reading, but I confess a fascination with tables of statistics, recording course by course, and state by state, and grade by grade, where our students come from and what they do once they arrive—that is, what they do in the classroom!

I am, of course, aware that nothing so inadequately reflects the real nature of learning than a stark recital of the percentage of students taking English 101 who received a grade of B-. But if you look beneath the statistics, a stronger framework can be discerned.

I mean by this that the educational values of Washington and Lee can be discovered, not only in our Trustee Statement of Institutional Purpose, but also in the registrar's homely account of what we teach and to whom, term by term, in the course of the academic year. He records, for example, that in the Fall Term of 1983, approximately 83 percent of the courses taught at Washington and Lee were taught in sections of 25 or fewer students. Indeed fully half of our courses were taught in sections of 15 or fewer, and these percentages do not take into account the 27 supervised independent study courses taught in that same term.

What is to be made of these statistics? What they reveal is a settled, consistent theory of pedagogy. They eloquently convey the Faculty's conviction that truly exceptional teaching and learning can only take place when the scale is carefully controlled, when anonymity is impossible, when intellectual discourse can assume the shape of dialogue or conversation and not simply the uninterrupted monologue of a distant lecturer. They reveal the Faculty's conviction that human development is idiosyncratic; it has its own peculiar pace and admits of very different impediments from one student to the next. Teaching in human scale permits the skilled instructor to know what is happening in every seat in the seminar room; permits the assignment of much critical writing which can, in turn, be criticized; permits a small group to leap quickly past principles already understood, procedures already mastered.

These things cannot be taken lightly. They are translations from a carefully controlled budget, a budget which, nonetheless, turns upon the requirements of a settled pedagogy. Let me explain it this way:

- A) The Faculty approve changes in degree requirements calling for a higher level of foreign language study;
- B) Enrollments in Spanish rise by 30 percent;
- C) The options in response to this phenomenon are:
  - 1) offer the same number of Spanish sections as before with an average enrollment of 15 and compel some students who wish to study Spanish to take Russian instead;
  - 2) offer the same number of Spanish sections as before but allow the average enrollment to rise to 20, thus changing the conversational nature of the course.
  - 3) offer the necessary sections of Spanish, maintaining both class size and student choice even though it means adding a new position in Romance languages.

We elect the third option at Washington and Lee because it is the correct one but also because we have been given the liberty to do so by the generosity of our alumni, parents, and friends. The Annual Fund makes exactly this kind of difference in our lives and in our work. Members of the Washington and Lee family know this well enough, for they experienced it firsthand when they were here. More importantly, they continue to act upon that knowledge by giving generously each year to our educational budget through the Annual Fund.

We are all immensely grateful, faculty and students alike—especially those of us enrolled in Spanish this year! Muchas Gracias!

Historic High for Deferred Giving Programs

Washington and Lee's ever-expanding program of deferred giving reached a major plateau during the 1983-84 academic year when nine alumni and one friend of the University made gifts which totaled more than $1 million—the highest total of such gifts in W&L's history.

S L Kopald, '43, chairman of the Board of Trustees' Planning and Development Committee, explained that the value of those deferred gifts was $1,173,120, a figure representing the total tax deductions available to the donors. That is the standard for measuring deferred gifts used by all philanthropically-supported institutions. The combined market value of the gifts to W&L was $2,595,569.

Unlike outright gifts, which are measured by their market or cash values, deferred gifts are benefactions which allow donors, or their named beneficiaries, to retain lifetime incomes based on the donated assets. Because the assets are not given over for the school's exclusive use during the donors' lifetimes, or the beneficiaries' lifetimes, the actuarial value of the gifts (rather than the full asset or cash values) determine income tax deductions. But assets approximating $2.5 million will some day benefit Washington and Lee—by adding to endowment, by creating endowed scholarship funds, or through some other purposes stipulated by the donors.

Among the eventual uses designated by donors during 1983-84 are:

- An endowment for an undergraduate scholarship in honor of Dr. Charles V. Amole, '29. Future Amole Scholars will be students who possess high traits of character and who have records of outstanding academic achievement.
- An endowment creating the Esmarch S. and Sara T. Gilreath Endowment for Chemistry to support scholarships, lectureships, and other urgent needs of the department of chemistry.
- The establishment of an endowed scholarship in honor of James Lewis Howe Sr., '18, and in honor of James Lewis Howe Jr., III, and IV. Howe Scholars are to be students of notable achievement who require financial assistance in order to attend Washington and Lee.
- An endowed scholarship in honor of Russell W. Ingram Jr., '45, to be awarded with preference to deserving students from high schools in the Hollywood and Fort Lauderdale, Fla., areas.
- The creation of an endowed scholarship in honor of Earl T. Jones, '30. Qualified students from the state of North Carolina will be eligible to become Jones Scholars.
- A special University Fund in honor of James Bland Martin, '31L, and the late Christine Hale Martin. Mrs. Martin was a Trustee of the University from 1978 to 1983.
- Three other University Funds similar to the Martin Fund will be created in honor of Clyde Nixon Allen, '25, William L. Webster, '12, and Carroll B. Wiltshire, '13.

Of the $1,173,120 in combined actuarial values, six unitrusts amounted to $796,377; two annuity trusts totaled $159,157; and, two pooled income fund gifts equalled $217,586.

"More and more alumni and friends are realizing that they can substantially benefit Washington and Lee and, at the same time, engage in helpful tax and financial planning for their families by making income-retained deferred gifts for the University," noted William C. Washburn, associate director of development for deferred giving.

Washburn added that a special publication Non Incautus Futuri, describes a variety of beneficial income-retained giving methods available to those who would like to invest, through gifts, in Washington and Lee's future. That publication is available from the Office of University Development, Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia 24450.

Milburn K. Noell, also an associate director of development for deferred giving, observed that many alumni wish to create family memorials, scholarships, and the like. Said Noell: "These alumni often find that they can assure their objectives by making deferred gifts while enjoying important immediate income tax deductions plus lifetime incomes."

Including last year's historic deferred giving activity, Washington and Lee has had 19 unitrusts, six annuity trusts, and 14 pooled income fund gifts created for the University's benefit. The approximate total actuarial value of these 39 deferred gifts is in excess of $9 million.

Non Incautus Futuri: A Guide to Participation in the Future of Washington and Lee University is available from the Office of University Development.

The Robert E. Lee Associates

The Board of Trustees established the Robert E. Lee Associates in 1967 to identify and recognize leadership in support of the University's educational program through the Annual Fund. Alumni and friends are cordially invited to join this fellowship.

Qualification for membership: An alumnus, parent, or friend may join the Robert E. Lee Associates by contributing $1,000 or more to the University through its Annual Fund for support of current operations in the educational and general budget. This gift may be paid in one or more installments during the fiscal year—July 1 to June 30.

General's Council: A Lee Associate becomes a member of the General's Council for cumulative gifts totaling $10,000 or more in 12 consecutive years or less, or for a pledge to accomplish this result. Thus, a donor may fulfill this requirement by giving—or pledging to give—$1,000 in any 10 years out of 12, by making larger gifts at less frequent intervals, or by a single gift of $10,000 or more.

Listed are members of the General's Council and those Lee Associates who made a gift to the Annual Fund of $1,000 or more during 1983-84.

Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges

A record $2,513,533 was contributed by business and industry to 14 private Virginia colleges through the VFIC during 1983-84. Washington and Lee's share was $213,439.

Under the direction of a board that includes 38 business leaders and the presidents of the 14 independent colleges, the VFIC enlisted nearly 1,000 supporters, primarily corporations doing business in Virginia who are concerned with strengthening private higher education. Although, because of space limitations, the full listing of donor sources published annually in the VFIC annual report is not repeated here, Washington and Lee acknowledges with gratitude the concern and leadership of the companies, foundations and individuals, who made generous contributions through the VFIC.

Business and Industry

Washington and Lee University was assisted in large measure during 1983-84 by direct grants for current expenditures from corporations in addition to corporate assistance received through the Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges (VFIC). Investments by private business in private education take on special meaning and importance. The total of these gifts during the 1983-84 year was $73,424.

Estates and Irrevocable Deferred Gifts

The following persons have either created an irrevocable deferred gift on behalf of Washington and Lee or have informed the Trustees that they have included the University in their wills or estate plans.

Irrevocable deferred gifts are charitable arrangements whereby income is retained for the lifetime of the donor and/or his or her beneficiaries. An income tax deduction is available at the time the deferred gift is created even though the principal does not pass to Washington and Lee until the death of the donor or beneficiaries.

Also included are planned gifts to Washington and Lee which use life insurance as the financial arrangement.

Gifts for Restricted Current Purposes

Each year generous gifts are made for expenditure on specific projects or programs within the current year's educational and general budget. As such these gifts are restricted by the donors as to use and are, therefore, not included in the unrestricted Annual Fund. Such gifts are vitally important to support academic enterprises of special focus.

Class Agents— Annual Fund Heroes

Washington and Lee's Annual Fund has been among the most successful in the nation for at least the last decade. The heroes of those successful efforts have been the Class Agents who work diligently each year to help the University maintain its strength and the quality of its educational program.

Very few institutions place as much trust and reliance in Class Agents as does Washington and Lee. It can truly be said that if the Class Agents don't do the job, it doesn't get done. Under the leadership and guidance of the Annual Fund Chairman, the Class Agents set their own class goals; plan and manage their own class campaigns; and handle their own mailings, from writing the letters to getting them stuffed, stamped, and posted. The Class Agent who does more than is asked is the rule, not the exception. Their outstanding record of success testifies to their devotion, dedication, and plain hard work.

Once again in 1984-85 they face a formidable task—the Annual Fund goal is $1,450,000, a 7 percent increase over the total raised a year ago. Those whose names are listed below deserve both the support and the gratitude of all who care for Washington and Lee.

Scholarship honors Ross L. Malone

Through the generosity of friends of the late Ross L. Malone, former Rector of the Washington and Lee Board of Trustees, the Ross Malone Honor Scholarship has been established in the W&L School of Law.

The scholarship, in the amount of $10,000, will be awarded in the fall of 1985 to an entering first-year student in the School of Law who has demonstrated superior academic achievement and the high moral standards, diligence, and collegiality that Ross Malone exemplified. Once awarded the scholarship will be renewable for the second and third years of study so long as the recipient continues to demonstrate the academic and other characteristics that led to the award.

"It is particularly appropriate that Ross Malone be honored in this way," said W&L President John D. Wilson. "Having a Ross Malone Scholar in our law school will be a constant reminder to all of us of the many, many contributions that Mr. Malone made to this University and to the legal profession."

Malone received both his undergraduate and law degrees at Washington and Lee. He held honorary doctorates from seven colleges and universities, including Washington and Lee (1958).

Malone had been general counsel of General Motors from 1967 until shortly before his death in 1974. He had served as president of the American Bar Association in 1958-59. He was also a Deputy Attorney General of the United States in 1952-53 and was active in public service in a number of other capacities as well—including the chairmanship of the Hoover Commission's task force on streamlining legal procedures in the Executive branch.

He was one of the principal drafters of the 25th Amendment to the Constitution, providing for succession in the event of the "death or resignation" of the President or Vice President.

Malone became a member of the W&L Board of Trustees in 1967 and was elected Rector of the Board in 1973.

According to Farris P. Hotchkiss, director of university relations and development, contributions may still be made to the endowment fund for the Malone Scholarship.

Scholarships honor Rupert Latture

Two separate scholarships have been established in honor of Rupert N. Latture, professor emeritus of politics at Washington and Lee and a long-time member of the University community: the Rupert Nelson Latture Scholarship and the Delta Upsilon Fraternity Scholarship.

"Professor Latture has contributed in so many important ways to Washington and Lee that it is only appropriate that he be honored in a manner that will contribute so meaningfully to future generations of W&L students," said W&L President John D. Wilson of the two endowed scholarships.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Latture, '49, of Greensboro, N.C., have created the Rupert Nelson Latture Scholarship to recognize Latture's "extraordinarily long years of devotion and service to Washington and Lee."

The scholarship is to be awarded annually to a deserving student who requires assistance to attend the University.

Bill Latture is Rupert Latture's son and has himself been an active member of the Washington and Lee family, serving his alma mater as a director and treasurer of the Alumni Board, a Class Agent for the Class of 1949, and president of the Greensboro, N.C., area alumni chapter. Bill and Louise Latture are the parents of a Washington and Lee graduate, Richard Garland Latture, '81.

The Delta Upsilon Fraternity Scholarship was established in Latture's honor by the alumni of the Washington and Lee Chapter of Delta Upsilon. Preference in awarding the scholarship will be given to sons and daughters of Delta Upsilon chapter alumni.

Latture served as adviser to the fraternity, which was established at W&L in 1930 and remained active until 1971. At its meeting in October, the board of directors of the fraternity's alumni chapter voted to dispose of the remaining corporation assets of approximately $26,000 by endowing the scholarship fund in honor of Latture.

"Professor Latture has been a valued friend of the chapter for many years, and we felt this was the very best way to acknowledge his contributions to Delta Upsilon," said Emmett Poindexter, '20, '23L, of Rutherford, N.J., president of the alumni corporation.

The vice president of the corporation is Judge Joseph E. Hess of Buena Vista, '60, '63L; secretary is W&L law professor Lewis H. LaRue, '59; and treasurer is Lewis G. John, '58, dean of students.

Latture is a 1915 graduate of Washington and Lee. As a student he was one of the founders of the national honorary leadership society Omicron Delta Kappa, which now has chapters on college campuses across the country.

After teaching for two years in private preparatory schools and serving in World War I, Latture returned to Washington and Lee in 1920 in the political science department. He was promoted to full professor in 1941, the year he was named head of the department.

Following his retirement from active teaching in 1962, he stayed on as a special adviser to the president at W&L with a variety of assignments. He will celebrate his 93rd birthday in January.

Librarian takes new post

Maurice D. Leach Jr., head librarian at Washington and Lee since 1968, has resigned from that position, effective July 1, 1985.

Following a year's leave of absence, Leach will return to his professorial post at W&L and will direct a newly-created Friends of the Library organization.

W&L President John D. Wilson announced Leach's resignation and said that a search for a new librarian will begin immediately under the direction of John Elrod, dean of the College (of arts and sciences).

"Maurice Leach's contributions to the development of our magnificent undergraduate library hardly need documentation from me," said Wilson. "His 16 years in office have witnessed an enormous growth in collection size and quality and in the range of bibliographic services provided to our students and faculty. The University will long be in his debt."

The Friends of the Library organization will be involved in increasing support for the University Library, both in monetary terms and in obtaining new materials for the library's collections.

Leach was appointed head librarian at W&L in July 1968. At the time of his appointment, he was a program adviser to the Ford Foundation at the American University in Beirut, helping to upgrade, develop, and build libraries for colleges, universities, and governments in the Middle East.

He was pursuing that assignment on leave of absence from his post as professor and chairman of the department of library science at the University of Kentucky, a position he had held since 1959.

He holds a B.A. in history from the University of Kentucky and a bachelor of library science degree from the University of Chicago.

Earl T. Jones' trust establishes scholarship

Earl T. Jones, '30, had a dream of making a significant lifetime gift to his alma mater. He has realized that dream not once, but twice, through Annuity Trustee Agreements with Washington and Lee.

In July 1975 Jones, a prominent citizen of Raleigh, N.C., entered into the first Annuity Trust Agreement when he made a gift of General Mills' stock valued at approximately $55,000 to Washington and Lee. Jones is president of Jesse Jones Sausage Company, which was founded by his father. He had just sold the company to General Mills at the time he made the gift.

The irrevocable agreement stipulates that the principal of the Trust will ultimately go to Washington and Lee for the establishment of the Earl T. Jones Scholarship endowment, the proceeds of which are to provide financial assistance to students from North Carolina, Jones' adopted state. (He is a Virginian by birth and does claim that "once a Virginian, always a Virginian.")

In addition to attractive tax benefits in this life income trust, Jones receives quarterly annuity payments, set at his desired level, for his lifetime.

Jones was extremely proud that the agreement enabled him to fulfill one of his strongest wishes.

So proud was he, in fact, that nine years later in February 1984 he repeated the arrangement by establishing a second Annuity Trust Agreement. This one was funded with Gulf Oil appreciated securities valued at approximately $70,000. This came about at the time of Standard Oil of California's buyout of Gulf. Once again, Jones realized attractive tax benefits on the gift of the securities. As in the earlier Trust, Jones will receive annuity payments of a fixed amount for his lifetime and the principal will ultimately be added to the Earl T. Jones Scholarship endowment.

The gifts are not surprising. Jones has long been a generous benefactor of Washington and Lee. He served as Class Agent for the Class of '30 for many years and was instrumental in the all-time high amount that his class raised for the Annual Fund during its Golden Anniversary Reunion year of 1980.

Of his latest contributions, Farris P. Hotchkiss, director of university relations and development said: "Washington and Lee is forever grateful to Earl Jones for his generous foresight. The future of North Carolina students and indeed all of Washington and Lee University will be brighter because of this devoted alumnus."

Alcohol educator mixes sound advice with humor

Father Joseph Martin, widely acknowledged as one of the country's most effective educators on alcoholism, told an audience of about 1,200 at Washington and Lee University on October 15 that alcoholism is the most complex and destructive disease in the world.

"Alcoholism is a disease that affects the body, mind, and soul," said Martin. "It is the most destructive disease in the world—most people who catch it die. It is also one of the diseases of which we know the least."

Martin made his presentation at W&L's Warner Center under the auspices of the University's Student Health Committee and the Baur Alcohol Awareness Program.

Currently associate pastor of St. Joan of Arc Church in Aberdeen, Md., Martin is the author of several books, including a new one entitled No Laughing Matter and is co-founder of Ashley, Inc., a non-profit, tax-exempt center dedicated to the treatment of the sick and suffering alcoholic.

Martin entertained his audience with humor but delivered a sobering message about alcohol and alcoholism.

An alcoholic himself, Martin was sent to a treatment center for priests and said that "the greatest thing I learned about myself was I was sick, not evil."

He suggested that most of the drinking done after high school is because "it's either the macho thing to do or the sophisticated thing to do."

Among the reasons he listed for drinking alcohol are curiosity, custom, conviviality, escape, and euphoria.

Alcohol, said Martin, is a sedative drug and alcoholism is the addiction to that drug. "Once contracted," he said, "it lasts until death."

Martin compared the effects of alcohol on the brain to the effects of ether used as an anesthesia for surgery patients.

"Alcohol acts on the brain precisely the same way ether does," he said, scrawling the chemical formulas for both on a blackboard. "Ether is a double shot of alcohol without a chaser. Now if alcoholism is the addiction to this drug, does it make sense to use just your mouth and not your head?"

An alcoholic, Martin told the audience, is someone whose drinking makes trouble.

"If you are an alcoholic, your definition of alcoholism will not include you," Martin said. "If your drinking is making trouble and you want your trouble to stop, stop drinking."

Alcoholism can be a deadly disease in a variety of ways, he added. "It can kill by sedation. You can overdose on alcohol," he said. "And it kills by the ton on the highway."

Referring to the practice of drinking and driving, Martin said that it is physically impossible to drive competently under the influence of alcohol.

Added Martin: "I believe that driving in a drugged condition is a breach of conscience."

Martin's appearance at W&L was an outgrowth of the University's program designed to educate incoming freshmen about the dangers of alcohol abuse. That program has been aided, in part, by the establishment of the Baur Alcohol Awareness Program which was established through a gift from Andrew H. Baur of St. Louis, a 1937 graduate of W&L.

Father Martin presents his "Chalk Talk on Alcohol" in the Warner Center.

President appoints committee on University drug policies

Leonard E. Jarrard, professor of psychology and head of the psychology department at Washington and Lee, has been appointed chairman of a 10-member committee that will review the University's current policies and practices bearing on the institution's response to drug offenses.

Washington and Lee President John D. Wilson appointed the ad hoc committee upon the recommendation of the University's board of trustees, which expressed its interest in the subject as the result of action of a special grand jury that probed drug trafficking in Rockbridge County.

Composed of faculty, students, and administrators, the committee will be asked to submit a report which will be reviewed by the president and the faculty and submitted to the trustees.

In addition to Jarrard, the committee consists of Peter Baumgaertner, a third-year law student from Syosset, N.Y.; Darby Brower, a senior from Carversville, Pa.; Jay D. Cook Jr., professor of accounting; Robert J. de Maria, associate professor of journalism; Louis W. Hodges, professor of religion; Lewis G. John, dean of students; Robert W. McAhren, professor of history; Michael A. Pleva, professor of chemistry; and, Robert Tomaso, a senior from Milford, Mass.

During its study, the committee will examine the University's own internal agencies that are involved with cases involving drug offenses and the institution's relationships with external agencies.

Further, President Wilson has expressed his hope that the committee will make recommendations to improve the University's preventive or educational programs and that it will be able to give some consideration to questions associated with student criminal convictions of other kinds.

Jarrard has been head of the department of psychology at Washington and Lee since 1971 and has conducted research into a brain structure called the

Admissions interviews increase by more than 80 percent

On-campus interviews of prospective students are up 83 percent this year over the same period a year ago, according to the University's Office of Admissions.

From June 1 through October 31, admissions officials conducted on-campus interviews with 738 high school seniors. That compares with 404 interviews during the same period in 1983. The increase includes 168 young women and 166 more young men than last year.

In addition, the University's admissions office personnel and representatives of W&L's Alumni-Admissions Program are seeing more students during college night programs and on visits to individual high schools than in the past several years.

"We have taken more information cards and admissions materials on the road with us this year, but we are still running out of the literature in almost every instance," noted William H. Hartog, director of admissions.

Though Hartog adds that it is too early to predict what the increased interest might mean in the actual number of applications, he did suggest it is quite possible that the University will receive as many as 2,000 applications as opposed to 1,500 a year ago.

Last year the admissions office printed 17,000 applications and distributed about 16,000; this year 25,000 forms were printed and are already gone with an extra 3,000 being printed.

The increase in interest has caused the admissions staff to expand their high school visits. Officials will visit 600 high schools in 35 states this year. Too, the admissions office has been forced to add an extra hour of on-campus interviewing on Saturdays—traditionally the biggest day for students to visit campuses.

"So far we couldn't be happier with the increase in interest," said Hartog. "As we had hoped, interest in Washington and Lee has not only increased among young women who will be entering the undergraduate schools for the first time in 1985 but there has also been a surge of interest among young men."

hippocampus for the past 17 years with grant support from the National Science Foundation. For a number of years, Jarrard has taught a spring term class on psychoactive drugs, which examines psychological, pharmacological, and physiological aspects of drugs with consideration given to the response of society to drug usage.

W&L Lab Jazz Band plays at World's Fair

The 19-piece Washington and Lee University Lab Jazz Band took its music to the birthplace of jazz in October when it performed at the Louisiana World Exposition.

Under the direction of W&L music professor Robert Stewart, the band presented a 45-minute program on the Cornet Stage at the World's Fair.

"Actually we didn't play Dixieland, though we did perform a couple of 'blues' numbers," said Stewart. "Much of the program featured 'big band' music from the 1940s along with the new music of composers Jay Chattaway and Rob McConnell."

Arrangements for the appearance were made more than two years ago when Stewart sent organizers of the World's Fair a tape of the band's music and some photographs.

"It was a splendid opportunity for our young musicians, not only performing at the World's Fair but having a chance to hear some Dixieland jazz while we were there," noted Stewart.

The W&L Lab Jazz Band was formed two years ago with the addition of several musicians to the existing W&L Brass and Percussion Ensemble. That ensemble has routinely taken a spring tour, usually going to Florida and performing on a cruise ship to the Bahamas during the University's spring break.

The W&L Lab Jazz Band's World's Fair program featured soloists Whitney Gadsby on the tenor sax, Adam Reinstein and Todd Harvey on trumpet, John Riley on trombone, and Todd Brown, Jay Wingert, and Bruce Reed on drums.

The band performs at various W&L functions throughout the school year and provided pre-game and halftime entertainment for this year's Homecoming football game which was held on October 13 at Wilson Field.

Craun examines blasphemy in medieval texts

A study that determines the normative meaning of the term "blasphemy" in medieval texts has been published by Washington and Lee English professor Edwin D. Craun.

Craun's essay, entitled "Inordinata Locutio: Blasphemy in Pastoral Literature, 1200-1500," appears in the scholarly journal, Traditio: Studies in Ancient and Medieval History, Thought, and Religion, published by the Fordham University Press.

In the paper, Craun seeks to determine why poets, jurists, and chroniclers call certain statements about God blasphemous by analyzing the works which popularized the teaching of the church fathers and scholastic theologians. The study is based on all the confessional manuals, handbooks for preachers and catechetical treatises which survive in English libraries, as well as on sermons, collections of canon law, and imaginative literature.

Craun's essay was researched and written while he was a Visiting Fellow of University College at England's Oxford University under Washington and Lee's program of faculty exchange with Oxford.

Craun

While at Oxford in the winter of 1982, Craun read an early version of the essay to the Oxford University Medieval Society. That society is composed of virtually all the dons from Oxford and neighboring universities who do research in medieval culture.

A related essay by Craun on Robert Henryson's 15th-century poem "The Testament of Cresseid" will appear in Studies in Philology this winter. Research for that essay was supported by a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities, and a shorter version of the essay was read at a gathering of the Southeastern Medieval Association earlier this year in Charlottesville.

In October, Craun inaugurated a new series of lectures sponsored by W&L's English department when he spoke on "The Hazards of Question-mongering: A Cautionary Tale for Readers." The lecture was concerned with the question of why people misuse language to lie, slander, and blaspheme.

Craun has taught English at W&L since 1971. He is a graduate of Wheaton College and received the Ph.D. from Princeton. He has been a Woodrow Wilson Fellow and a Fellow of the Southeastern Institute of Medieval and Renaissance Studies. During the summer of 1983, he was a participant in a National Endowment for the Humanities seminar at Brown University.

Tucker Lecturer urges changes in U.S. Constitution

Arthur S. Miller, professor of law emeritus at George Washington University, told a Washington and Lee University audience that the U.S. Constitution is no longer able to adapt effectively to changing circumstances and requires major revisions.

Miller, who is the author of 10 books on constitutional law, delivered the 36th annual John Randolph Tucker Lecture at the W&L School of Law on October 19th.

Admitting that he was bucking the tide of the "current euphoria that is sweeping the nation," Miller contended that the Constitution "is always changing with the times. What the people did in 1787 was tell generations of Americans to write their own constitution. The Constitution is always in a state of becoming. It is always being updated."

But, said Miller, it is no longer possible to make the incremental adaptations of constitutionalism that are necessary.

"Today and in the immediate future," said Miller, "we are faced with a novel and unique set of circumstances that, to me, suggest the need for rethinking our constitutional order."

"We are confronted with something new and entirely unforeseen by those 55 men who wrote the document of 1787. We exist in a system of pandemic social change. Science and technology are on the loose. No one really knows where they are taking us."

He further said the current global society and the influence of major corporate powers in the United States today represent a new situation with which the current Constitution cannot effectively deal.

Miller maintained that the only valid end of government "is the promotion of social justice" and argued that the political and economic order in this country and elsewhere "does not achieve a satisfactory measure of social justice. Too many people are left out. There will be increasing numbers left out in the future."

Justice Stephenson honored by W&L School of Law

Justice Roscoe B. Stephenson Jr. of the Virginia Supreme Court was awarded honorary membership in the Washington and Lee University chapter of the Order of the Coif on October 12th.

The Order of the Coif is a national legal honorary society which was founded to encourage legal scholarship and to advance the ethical standards of the legal profession.

Justice Stephenson's award recognizes his distinguished legal career. Since 1981 he has served on the Virginia Supreme Court. Prior to that, he had served nine years as a judge on the Virginia Circuit Court.

He received his bachelor's degree from Washington and Lee in 1943 and his law degree from W&L in 1947. He was awarded an honorary degree from the University in 1983.

Justice Stephenson had a distinguished career as a practicing lawyer in western Virginia prior to his election to the Circuit Court bench. A fellow of the American College of Trial Lawyers, he was for many years Commonwealth's Attorney for Alleghany County and later was in private practice in Covington and Clifton Forge.

Justice Stephenson comes from a family of Washington and Lee graduates. His father, Roscoe B. Stephenson Sr., received the LL.B. in 1908 while his son, Roscoe B. Stephenson III, received the juris doctor degree in 1981.

The award to Justice Stephenson was made during a banquet held for members of the Washington and Lee Law Council, the organization of law school alumni.

W&L professor receives NEH grant

A team of biomedical investigators, including Washington and Lee University psychology professor H. Eugene King, has been awarded a grant of $184,507 to support its continued research on the behavioral consequences of hypertension.

The two-year grant was made by the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute. It will be used to continue the detailed investigation of changes in behavior which may result from marked and persistent elevation of the cerebral blood pressure.

In addition to King, the team consists of two co-principal scientists from the University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine.

Currently on academic leave from Washington and Lee for the fall term, King is now at the Laboratory of Physiology and Behavior in Pittsburgh where he is devising the experimental protocol and behavioral tests that will be used to examine some of the questions arising from the team's earlier research.

W&L Superdance contributes $21,597 to MD Telethon

Students at Washington and Lee University contributed $21,597 to the Muscular Dystrophy Association during the annual Jerry Lewis-Labor Day Telethon Monday (September 3).

The money was raised last winter during W&L's sixth annual Superdance, a three-day dance marathon.

Ricky de Alessandrini, a 1984 W&L graduate from Norfolk and chairman of last year's Superdance, appeared on national television from Las Vegas presenting a check to Lewis.

Meantime, W&L seniors Chris Williams of Newark, Del., and David Sizemore of Covington, officials of this year's Superdance, made an appearance on the Lynchburg version of the telethon which was shown on WSET-TV.

According to Williams, plans are already underway for the seventh W&L Superdance, which will be held February 1, 2, and 3.

Russ, '78, named research archaeologist

Kurt C. Russ has been appointed to the position of research archaeologist for the Washington and Lee University Laboratory of Archaeology.

A Buena Vista native, Russ received his bachelor's degree from Washington and Lee in 1978 and earned his master's degree in anthropology from the University of Tennessee in 1984.

As a student at W&L, Russ worked on several of the University's archaeological projects, including the Liberty Hall project for which he was site supervisor in 1976 and field supervisor in 1977.

During his graduate studies at Tennessee, Russ participated in several important excavations. He was the mortuary site specialist for a project in Chillicothe, Ill., during the summer of 1980 and was field director and laboratory supervisor for an excavation in Knoxville, Tenn.

Russ is a member of the American Anthropological Association, the Archaeological Society of Virginia, and the Society of American Archaeology.

Since joining the archaeology laboratory in July, Russ has already served as project director on an archaeological investigation conducted in Pocahontas County, W.Va.

W&L archaeologists uncover possible burial mound

A team of Washington and Lee University archaeologists have uncovered what may have been a burial mound dating from between 1000 B.C. and 900 A.D. in Pocahontas County, W.Va.

The W&L Laboratory of Archaeology was contracted by Copper and Smith, P.C., of Harrisonburg, Va., to conduct a Phase II archaeological investigation of a proposed waste treatment site near Hillsboro, W.Va.

According to Kurt C. Russ, research archaeologist for W&L, the team located both a prehistoric site and one prehistoric mound that is approximately 18 feet in diameter and 2 1/2 feet high.

"The site was probably occupied on a seasonal basis, and we anticipate the mound may have contained human remains and was associated with the site," said Russ.

The W&L laboratory has recommended that further studies be made of the area in the form of a Phase III investigation.

"We have only been engaged in limited testing of the mound," noted Russ, "so it is too early to say what might be contained in it. But there does exist the possibility that it could offer some idea on mortuary practices of the time."

During the course of their investigation, the W&L team found 1,570 artifacts, all of which are lithic and represent the by-products of tool manufacture of subsequent modification.

Included among those 1,570 artifacts were three projectile points that offer information regarding the chronological affiliation of the site and mound. The point types indicate a dominant Early to Middle Woodland occupation for the site. The Early to Middle Woodland period in that area of West Virginia is believed to be about 1000 B.C. to 900 A.D.

The artifacts found at the site indicate the primary behavioral routines occurring at the site had to do with tool production and hunting related activities, according to Russ.

"The mound component at the site may offer us evidence of a more permanent occupation as well as a behavioral routine associated with the treatment of the dead," he said.

John M. McDaniel, associate professor of sociology and anthropology at W&L and director of the laboratory of archaeology, was the principal investigator on the project.

"This is the 17th job that we have done of this kind under contract, and while we don't want to exaggerate the importance of the find, it is clearly the most unusual and potentially exciting that we have had," said McDaniel.

Campus speakers

• James M. Cox, Avalon Professor of English at Dartmouth College, delivered the third annual Shannon-Clark Lecture in English at Washington and Lee in October. His lecture was entitled "Adventures of Huckleberry Finn: A Hard Book to Take."

A native of Virginia, Cox holds degrees from the University of Michigan and Indiana University. He is editor of Robert Frost: Twentieth Century Views and author of Mark Twain: The Fate of Humor and of numerous essays on a wide range of American writers.

The Shannon-Clark Lectures in English were inaugurated two years ago at Washington and Lee by Edgar F. Shannon Jr., Commonwealth Professor of English at the University of Virginia, a W&L alumnus, and a Trustee of the University. The series honors the memory of his father, chairman of the Washington and Lee English department from 1914 until 1938, and Harriet Mabel Fishburn Clark, a grandmother of the donor whose gift to W&L established the lecture series.

• Robert J. Carson III, chairman of the department of geology at Whitman College in Walla Walla, Wash., presented an illustrated lecture about the eruption of Mount St. Helens in October under the sponsorship of the department of geology.

A native of Lexington, Carson had studied Mount St. Helens for several years prior to the eruption three years ago.

• The United States invasion of Grenada was the subject of a program that featured observations by a medical student who was in Grenada during the invasion and a spirited debate by two Washington and Lee professors.

After a presentation by Michael Kimmel, one of the medical students evacuated from Grenada during the invasion, Washington and Lee politics professor John Handelman and W&L journalism professor Clark Mollenhoff took opposing views of whether the invasion was justified.

Felix P. Welch, 1906-1984

Felix P. Welch, former Cincinnati Professor of Mathematics at Washington and Lee University, died September 22 following a brief illness. He was 78.

A memorial service was held in the R. E. Lee Episcopal Church in Lexington.

A native of Kewanee, Miss., Welch taught mathematics at Washington and Lee for 30 years, serving as head of the department of mathematics for 25 of those years.

He earned the bachelor of science degree in chemistry from Mississippi State University in 1929. He held the master's degree in mathematics from the University of Texas and received his Ph.D. in mathematics from the University of Illinois.

He served with the United States Army during World War II and retired from the Army in 1961 with the rank of major.

Welch began his teaching career at his undergraduate alma mater, Mississippi State, in 1929. He taught at the Starkville, Miss., school for 18 years before joining the faculty at Washington and Lee in 1947.

He held W&L's Cincinnati Professorship of Mathematics throughout his W&L teaching career.

One of Welch's fields of research involved developing visual aids in mathematics. In 1967, the Mathematical Association of America sponsored an animated film, The Theorem of the Mean, which Welch produced.

He was the co-author with Washington and Lee mathematics professor Robert S. Johnson of a textbook, Calculus.

He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa, the American Mathematical Association, the Mathematical Association of America, and the Virginia Academy of Science.

When Welch retired from active teaching in 1977, the W&L board of trustees elected him Cincinnati Professor of Mathematics, Emeritus.

Survivors include three cousins: Mrs. Jeffrey Hardin Gainey of Lisman, Ala.; Junius P. Welch of Houston, Texas; and Mrs. Agnes Hardin Wood of Pensacola, Fla.

Memorial contributions in Welch's honor may be made to the American Heart Fund.

The program was sponsored by W&L's chapter of Pi Sigma Alpha, the national honorary politics fraternity.

• Richard M. Rorty, the Kenan Professor of Humanities at the University of Virginia, presented a lecture entitled "The Objective of Values" in October under the sponsorship of the department of philosophy.

• Judge Randall T. Bell of the South Carolina Court of Appeals was the keynote speaker for Washington and Lee's 10th annual Legal Ethics in November.

Bell's lecture was entitled "The Lawyer as Gatekeeper: Ethical Dilemmas." The Legal Ethics Institute is part of Washington and Lee's program in applied ethics, "Society and the Professions."

• Milner S. Ball, Caldwell Professor of Constitutional Law at the University of Georgia, lectured on "A Theological Approach to Jurisprudence" in the W&L School of Law in November. The lecture represented the principal paper for a three-day colloquium held in W&L's Frances Lewis Law Center.

Letters to the Editor

The Board of Trustees' decision to admit women was both morally correct and in the best interests of the University. I applaud it. I am confident that the silent majority of Washington and Lee alumni join me.

SAMUEL D. HINKLE IV, '69

EDITOR:

It was 1958. In the company of my father, I visited W&L, along with UVa, Sewanee, and VMI, in an effort to decide where to go to college. My feelings for the University are grounded in my first sight of the Colonnade. From that first moment the decision was out of our hands—the grip of history and tradition held us fast. We had to be part of it—each in our own way.

The University molded my life in many ways. W&L, after all, is not just about academics—it is about moral character. It is about an Honor System which is not enforced against men, but embedded in their lives.

I fear for the traditions of the University when women are admitted. I believe that the camaraderie among women—the bond between women as women—is stronger and older than any other code or standard. What things which are great will suffer at its expense? Much, I fear.

Washington and Lee was a great school.

EDITOR:

I would like to comment on our new coeducational policy. Quite often it is easier and more pleasant to accept the status quo than to face the problems of the times. In the field of higher education the problems arising from mass education have led to a lowering of the quality of the education itself. With a seven-mile radius of where I have lived for the past 31 years there are now five colleges where formerly there was one. It is a noble reflection on the political and economic systems of our country which allows so many to take advantage of a college level education.

Unfortunately, the end product of a system which allows most anyone to enter, to be promoted without having improved his mind, and finally to be given a degree without once having his intellectual curiosity whetted leads to a mediocrity that I cannot approve of. I am appalled not by the form letter vocabulary of today's students but by their inability to express themselves with any other words.

To me, the essence of a liberal education is the development of an intellectual curiosity. It makes life an adventure. It is a constant, fascinating companion, always entertaining and faithful.

So what is the purpose of all this rambling? It is simply the quality of that intangible Washington and Lee education, that end-result of four years of close association with stimulating and interested teachers, the Honor System, the aura of what I think of as the General Lee mystique and the relaxed atmosphere whether one was in Doc's Corner Store or at the University Book Store browsing through the latest offerings.

Of all the arguments presented, both pro and con, I think that the Trustees have focused on those which most closely define the Washington and Lee experience, namely the quality of its education and its 235 years of proud heritage, and have concluded that they are in danger of being lost to the future generations of students.

I am proud that they had the foresight to see the problem, the courage to accept the challenge, and the wisdom to act in a manner that adds hope to the future.

Our motto, "Not unmindful of the future," would be a fitting title to the Board of Trustees' report for its minutes.

EDITOR:

The shock of the [University's] decision to go coed was something I had really felt would hamper my affections for Washington and Lee. Although I was never as militant as some students who threatened to withhold their "millions" (indeed I am neither that confident nor that tight), nonetheless I was quite disappointed.

In the first few days after the decision, I could be found moping around hopelessly reassuring myself that at least my heritage was intact, and that maybe, just maybe, there was some mistake. Once it became evident that all my "just maybes" were in vain, I resigned myself, however, reluctantly, to the fact that Washington and Lee as I knew it had somehow ceased to be. This made me angry, and somehow I took little solace in the fact that we had held out longer than the Democratic Party.

Gradually, as often happens, my anger gave way to melancholy, which in turn gave way to introspection. What I slowly began to perceive was that this needn't mark the end of my association with Washington and Lee, but instead the beginning of another one—one predicated on the kind of rational, intelligent thought that a Washington and Lee education is designed to foster. I began to realize that in the "freedom" of the "real world," I am forever tempered by, and reminded of, the valuable lessons of Washington and Lee. Like the effortless dancing of a kite, or the gentle sway of the furthest branch on the furthest limb, I am inexorably linked to a source from which I can take vitality and strength. This source, I find, is Washington and Lee, and feelings of remorse, regret, or anger over the decision to go coed are absolutely incongruous with the pride I take in having attended there.

Horace Greely once said: "Truth is one forever absolute, but opinion is truth filtered through the moods, the blood, the disposition of the spectator."

Reflecting upon this I can see my mistake. My mistake was not so much in the opinion that I took, and incidentally still hold, but rather in letting that opinion override the truth. The truth is that taken as a whole Washington and Lee is far too fine a group of ideas to be shunted merely for the sake of one opinion. Now secure in this myself, I can only hope that other alumni with similar misgivings can bring themselves to see the forest as well, and look beyond the trees of bitter disappointment that often block the path to rational judgment. For my part at least, I can assure you now that I am not unmindful of the future.
