President of the Student Body reports on Honor System, drugs, and dorm life

The following was excerpted from remarks Steve Robinson, president of the Student Body Executive Committee, made to parents at the closing session of the 17th annual Parents' Weekend on Nov. 6. Robinson is a senior from Alexandria, Va.

Students at Washington and Lee have a distinct advantage over students at other educational institutions. For one thing, they are able to discuss their ideas with people who are in a position to give them answers to their questions. The answers are not always the ones that they want, but, in any event, they have a place where they can find the answers. Student government, in addition to strong student-faculty relationships, is attempting to meet the needs of students in this respect.

The first two issues about which I will talk are issues that concern student government. I don't think one can ever say anything about Washington and Lee without mentioning the Honor System. The Honor System, which officially began here before the War between the States, embodies much of the spirit of Washington and Lee. Washington and Lee is an institution based upon the relationship between individuals, and the University community is a community of mutual trust.

Earlier this morning [during small-group discussions], many parents, probably those who have freshmen at Washington and Lee, were upset by the rash of thefts that we had at the beginning of the year in the freshman dormitories. At many large institutions, people would probably just say, "Well, somebody lost his wallet; that is a real shame." At Washington and Lee the matter was treated as a major crisis. Nothing like this had ever happened on the campus before. Through the Student Body Executive Committee and the administration of the University, a thorough investigation of the circumstances surrounding the incidents was made. It was fairly conclusively proven that the individuals involved in those thefts were students from without the Washington and Lee community. Posing as magazine salesmen, they made their way into the dormitories, and after spending several days in Lexington, they proceeded to Charlottesville to repeat their performance. Unfortunately, the University of Virginia would not ask for a search warrant of their accommodations in Charlottesville, so the issue pretty much died there. I will say for myself, and I am sure for many students at Washington and Lee, again primarily freshmen, it was a very disheartening thing to have happen at the beginning of the year.

But I think after these incidents, which I again emphasize were not caused by members of the University community, the situation is back to normal. The Honor System does work; the Honor System continues to work. It works, not because the Executive Committee enforces it, but because the students and the faculty have faith in it. The Honor System has been the heart of Washington and Lee for well over a century, and I think it will continue to be so. People can easily walk out of their rooms, not locking the doors. Professors still give unproctored exams. One can still take his final examinations whenever he wants to. I do not think the Honor System at Washington and Lee has been weakened in any way, if at all.

The second issue concerns dormitory parietal regulations. The question began several years ago. In fact, during my freshman year people began to talk about it at great length. The question is a very complex one, but I will try to make it as simple as possible.

Three years ago the rule prohibiting what was then known as female visitation in the dormitories was removed. Each dorm section was to make its own parietal regulations—that is the hours when they wanted women in their dorms, within University-suggested guidelines. Rules only allowed women in on the weekends, and in all instances they had to be out by some hour of the morning. It was first 2 a.m. and later extended to 4 a.m. These dormitory residents would have an interim period of five weeks during which to familiarize themselves with their new environment before making these regulations.

That was three years ago, and now the controversy over what is known as "social hours" is still an important one as far as the University is concerned. Limitations imposed by the University are almost negligible. In fact, the law and upperclass dormitories make their own rules completely, and the freshmen have only University guidelines for the weekend. This trend is in keeping with Washington and Lee's tradition of placing as much responsibility as is feasible in the hands of the students, and also the trend is moving away from in loco parentis that the University once assumed.

Another area of concern which is important to all students, not just student government, is the drug situation at Washington and Lee. There are drugs at Washington and Lee. In fact, there are a lot of them. I would hazard a guess that approximately 75 per cent of the students have tried marijuana—and I emphasize tried. This is a dramatic increase over the percentages of four years ago when I was a freshman. The number of regular users is probably one-fifth of this, at the most, but the University has realized that there is a problem of sorts.

Individuals who use speed, LSD, and the other more powerful drugs are even smaller in number, probably less than 15 per cent. Unfortunately, this is not the case at many of our neighboring universities. Heroin and other addictive drugs are not present on campus to my knowledge, and I think I have a fairly good knowledge of the situation.

In spite of the increased use of drugs by students—and I distinguish the word use from abuse—the University has changed its ideas and its policies on the drug situation. A previous policy on drugs written in 1967 was disciplinary in nature. It centered around that one concern. A new statement written last May explains the new position of the University. The University believes that it has a three-fold responsibility to the drug user. One is a program of education. McCormick Library and the Student Center Library have extensive sets of literature on drugs—the most current to be found. The purpose of having this literature in these places is obviously to help individuals who are interested in drugs or who are involved in them become aware of what they are getting into.

In addition, last year the University began making strong attempts to hire the services of a full-time clinical psychologist. Several individuals were interviewed last year, and job offers were made, but unfortunately none were taken. In the past six weeks, four individuals have been on the campus and interviewed for the position, and I can assure you that by next September, at the latest, there will be a full-time clinical psychologist on the campus, not just to deal with the drug situation or the problems individuals have with drugs, but with the academic pressures one has at Washington and Lee, the social pressures, or anything else that bothers a student.

As for enforcement, the University can really only enforce the drug regulations in University facilities. It would be futile, and I think absurd—for it would hurt the trust that the students have in the faculty and administration—for the University to invade student apartments to ferret out offenders. Allegations of drug misuse are handled once again by the students. There is a disciplinary group known as the Student Control Committee, consisting of nine members who handle any kind of student violation of social regulations or civil statutes of this nature. The people who serve on this committee are not people who take their duties lightly. I would think that, without doubt, it is the most prestigious of the appointed committees at the University.

I would also like to emphasize that the University has not portrayed itself as a sanctuary for drug users. The University policy statement on drugs was mailed to all students in October. I am sure after reading it they are very aware of the situation the University has. If civil authorities possessing the proper documents indeed have knowledge that there are drugs on the campus, the University will not stop them, and the University cannot stop them. The civil authorities have jurisdiction in this matter.

The drug situation at W&L is not very serious, I do not think. I think the reason it is not a serious problem is that the faculty and administration have placed the proper emphasis upon the situation. They have created a proper environment in which this problem can be discussed, and I am pretty sure that the drug situation at Washington and Lee will never get any worse than it is now. In fact, I think the situation will become a climate of better understanding by the students, and I think less of a problem.

After discussion of these matters, you may be a little upset, asking yourselves: "Why did I send my son to Washington and Lee? What is he getting for my $4,000 a year if he is coming down here and having a wild time?"

Your son is at a unique—I emphasize the word unique—educational institution. At Washington and Lee, I believe that your son is obtaining the finest education possible. He is getting the benefits of a small school, a tremendous faculty—a teaching faculty—and an environment that is very conducive to learning. This academic atmosphere is in no small way flavored by the Honor System and the close student-faculty relationship which I mentioned before. In fact, I think Washington and Lee would probably be the ideal college campus, the ideal university with the addition of one thing—that is women. Not too many people agree with that, but it is my own opinion.

Close contact between students and faculty has led to a trend which I believe will continue at Washington and Lee in the future. The faculty and administration in the past few years have recognized the ability of students to have a voice in the government of the University. Students have begun to play a greater role in the administration of Washington and Lee affairs. This first started with the Student Affairs Committee several years ago—a body of five students and five members of the faculty and administration, which has jurisdiction over fraternities and dormitory regulations. This past year the University Council was formed. This group consists of 12 students and 12 members of the faculty and administration, and it has jurisdiction over all the affairs of student life, with the exception of academic matters. But more importantly, this group has served as a forum for student-faculty ideas—an exchange of thoughts between the two groups of people who make up the University. And this year students have been appointed to several faculty committees, giving students an even greater voice in the affairs of Washington and Lee.

I think the future of Washington and Lee is bright. It is very bright, and Washington and Lee is fortunate to have a man with the ability and stature of President Huntley. I think the University, under his leadership and with the assistance of his personnel, is making the proper plans to meet the institution's needs over the next few years. But the key to Washington and Lee now, as it has been in the past, is its men—men like your sons. Your sons and the men who follow in their footsteps at Washington and Lee will determine the fate of the University. It is with them that the real key to the future lies. And after thinking about this fact, I feel very sure that the future of Washington and Lee is secure.

President Nixon's appointment of Lewis F. Powell, Jr., to the United States Supreme Court raised the question of how many other Washington and Lee alumni have served on the court. A search of the University's records revealed that three men who attended Washington and Lee or its parental institutions have preceded Powell in this high office.

The three are Thomas Todd, a graduate of Liberty Hall; Robert Trimble, who attended Washington Academy; and Joseph Rucker Lamar, who studied law at Washington and Lee for one year, taking as was common in those days the junior and the senior courses at the same time.

In addition, the records show that Washington and Lee has conferred honorary degrees upon five members of the Supreme Court.

Lewis F. Powell, Jr., did his undergraduate work at Washington and Lee for the B. S. degree and graduated from the Washington and Lee law school in 1931. He spent an additional year at Harvard for the Master of Laws degree.

Thomas Todd was born in King and Queen County, Va., on Jan. 23, 1765. His father, Richard Todd, died when Thomas was 18 months old. In 1781, when he was 16 years old, he served for six months in the American army. He graduated from Liberty Hall Academy (now Washington and Lee University) in 1783. He went to Bedford, Va., to live with the family of Harry Innes, a distinguished lawyer and member of the Virginia legislature. In return for room, board, and instruction in the law he tutored the Innes children. In 1784, Innes received a commission to establish a district court in the Kentucky area. He moved his family, including Todd, to Danville, Ky. Todd served as secretary-clerk of the 1784 Danville convention and succeeding conventions which were seeking to erect Kentucky into a separate state.

In 1788, Todd was admitted to the Virginia bar and began a successful law practice, specializing in land titles.

In 1801, he was appointed to the Kentucky Court of Appeals and later Chief Justice of the Kentucky Court. He gained a reputation for fairness in adjusting land titles, a matter of great concern to land owners at that time.

In 1807, President Jefferson appointed Thomas Todd to membership on the Supreme Court of the United States. He served on the court for 19 years, until his death in 1826. He was a loyal supporter of Chief Justice John Marshall in his zeal to create a strong Federal Court and a strong national government.

Robert Trimble was born Nov. 17, 1776, in Berkeley County, Va., (now a part of West Virginia). His family moved to Kentucky in 1778. He attended Washington

About 1801, he began the practice of law in Paris, Ky. He served as a member of the Kentucky Legislature, the Supreme Court of Kentucky, and the United States District Court.

In 1826, President John Quincy Adams appointed Robert Trimble to fill the vacancy on the Supreme Court of the United States created by the death of Thomas Todd. Trimble served only a little more than two years before his untimely death, Aug. 25, 1828. Trimble was in agreement with Chief Justice Marshall in almost all of the decisions rendered during his tenure on the high Joseph Rucker Lamar was born Oct. 14, 1857, in Ruckersville, Ga. He attended Richmond Academy in Augusta, Ga., and graduated from Bethany College in West Virginia. He studied law at Washington and Lee University 1877-78, completing successfully both the junior and senior courses in the law school in one year. He served as clerk to a prominent Augusta attorney, Henry Clay Foster, and was admitted to the bar of Georgia in 1878. He attained eminence in his state as a lawyer, legal scholar, and judge. He was largely responsible for the revised Civil Code of the State of Georgia (1896).

In 1911, Joseph Rucker Lamar was appointed to the Supreme Court of the United States by President Taft. This appointment was approved by the unanimous vote of the Senate Jan. 3, 1911. After five years of service on the court Justice Lamar died Jan. 2, 1916.

The following members of the United States Supreme Court have been awarded honorary degrees by Washington and Lee:

Marshall Research Library: W&L's cooperative neighbor

Chester Goolrick is an assistant professor of history at VMI, a free-lance writer, and a frequent contributor to Marshall Library periodicals.

Though at first glance the austere George C. Marshall Research Library in Lexington would appear to be solidly wedded to VMI—it faces the Institute's parade ground, its architecture conforms to VMI's, and there is the indisputable fact that General Marshall was a VMI graduate—the Library's ties with Washington and Lee are strong and growing with each passing year. There is, in fact, every reason to believe that the Library, which houses the personal papers of the World War II U.S. Army chief of staff and post-war Secretary of State as well as an impressive collection of historic data, will be of great value to W&L students and professors doing research in the future. As far as that goes, since the Library's facilities were opened on a limited basis last year, a number of students from Washington and Lee have used it to gather material for papers they were preparing for history classes.

The Library's value as an additional aid to learning in Lexington is not by any means the only link between it and W&L; it is indeed not too much to say that W&L has played a part in its growth from the day the Marshall Research Foundation was incorporated nearly 20 years ago. The late Dr. Francis P. Gaines, then president of W&L, was a charter member and incorporator of its board of directors and from the beginning took a special interest in its affairs. So, too, did Dr. Fred C. Cole during his years as president of W&L. Dr. Cole is now a member of the Foundation's board of directors, while the current president, Robert E. R. Huntley, is an ex officio member of the board like his predecessors. Last spring he was named a member of the Foundation's executive committee.

On another level, the Library has been a boon to students and their wives who have found employment as museum custodians, typists, cataloguers, and researchers. The Library itself benefits not only from their special skills, but the students produce the necessary scholarly atmosphere. The dozen or so pretty wives brighten the place up.

Support of the Library, a non-profit institution not connected directly with the State of Virginia, has come in a variety of ways from W&L alumni and faculty members. Numerous financial contributions have been received from alumni during fund-raising campaigns over the past decade to build, equip, and operate the Library as the only national memorial thus far to General Marshall. But gifts—testimonials in themselves of a desire to see the Library succeed—have taken other forms than money. Only recently, Col. Francis Pickens Miller, a graduate of W&L in the Class of 1914 and a long-time prominent figure in Virginia politics, gave a collection of papers, books, uniforms, and personal items covering his military experiences in Europe in both world wars. Other W&L alumni and faculty members have given or lent a diversity of items such as recruiting posters, maps, diaries, and other personal memorabilia which either enhance the Library's historical collection or can be used for special museum displays.

W&L professors have likewise been generous in assisting the Library's program in numerous ways. Dr. William A. Jenks, chairman of W&L's history department, recently contributed an article to the Library's quarterly Newsletter, in which he assessed historic development in higher education and changes which have been brought about by the new emphasis on independent studies during the shortened terms.

"The new look in undergraduate education," Dr. Jenks wrote, "gives our maturing young people a very special opportunity to acquaint themselves with the first-hand evidence of the past and to re-create in their own language what the records tell them. In this process the material aid bestowed upon our special research libraries, such as the Marshall Library, by thoughtful donors in addition to the taxes apportioned our federal and state archives will be returned a thousand fold."

Also, in 1967, at annual Law Day ceremonies sponsored by the Virginia Law Association and held at the Library, former W&L law school dean Charles P. Light was the principal speaker. Dean Light told 45 applicants being accorded U.S. citizenship of General Marshall's role in the Marshall Library and of the importance of the Library as a historical repository.

Marshall Foundation officials feel that this budding relationship between W&L and the Library represents only a modest beginning. As Dr. Jenks indicated in his article, the role of research institutions in higher education is of comparatively recent origin. As the years pass, it seems inevitable that more and more W&L professors and students will avail themselves of the rich resources of a historical treasure trove which few colleges are fortunate enough to have within what is almost literally a stone's throw of their campuses.

Curriculum expansion includes Chinese, term in Africa, ecological economics

A new course in Chinese, a study-abroad program in African culture and politics, new courses in the economics of resource conservation and ecology, and an entirely new selection of courses in anthropology and archaeology have been approved by the faculty.

The course in Chinese will be a two-term introduction to modern Mandarin, stressing the spoken language but gradually including the written language through use of colloquial texts. The course, which will carry six academic credits is to be taught by Dr. Harold Hill, assistant professor in the German department. The course will first be offered next fall. Hill reads and speaks fluent Russian and Ukrainian, as well as German and Chinese.

The new study-abroad course, offered by the politics department, will include lectures from African authorities in a wide range of fields, including economics, culture, and political structures and processes. A short orientation period on campus will precede the students' and instructor's departure for Africa. The course will be offered during the spring term, beginning next April, and will be taught by James Loesel, instructor in politics whose field of specialization is comparative African political science. Students at Washington and Lee have been able to study under similar supervised programs in Europe since the University instituted the spring term last year, and by arrangement with other colleges before that. The African course, however, is believed to be one of the first outside Europe on an undergraduate level in the region.

The new offerings in ecological economics will include a survey course treating the problem on national and global scales, with an examination of human and cultural influences which indicate the need for a systematic approach to conservation. A second course will provide students the opportunity to undertake individual study under the direction of a professor as well as group research on timely projects, emphasizing historical, descriptive, and analytical approaches. The second course will be taught in the six-week spring term, which was designed to permit Washington and Lee students to study full-time in a single field. Both courses in the economics of ecology are to be taught by Dr. S. Todd Lowry, associate professor of economics, beginning in the next academic year.

The new anthropology courses will include offerings in general cultural and physical anthropology, contemporary directions in the field, Latin American cultures, techniques and methodology, and archaeology. They, too, will be offered beginning in the 1972-73 year.

Washington and Lee's faculty has also approved a number of other course changes and additions, including new courses in drama, Italian, comparative literature, and philosophy, and revisions and expansions in art, classics, geology, politics, and administration.

On-the-Spot News Center

Complete facilities to provide Virginia radio stations with on-the-spot audio news coverage has been established at Washington and Lee by the Associated Press. The exchange service permits AP member stations to share the audio portion of actual news taking place—exclusive interviews, speeches, news conferences and, other news which is recorded “at the scene”—with every other participating AP station by a simple telephone call to Washington and Lee.

The new AP service, known as an “actuality exchange” and called “The Sound of Virginia,” began officially on Jan. 4. The operation allows Virginia stations to broadcast tapes of actual news events which is impossible for every station in the state to cover on its own. Until now, if a station was unable to be at the scene of the news itself, it had to rely on merely reading second-hand written accounts transmitted on the AP teletype. In a few cases, stations made their own impromptu arrangements with other individual stations to share an “actuality,” but no single station has ever been able to provide such a service to all the other AP radio broadcasters in Virginia.

The Associated Press is a cooperative news service, with every member required to notify other members—via teletype or by the telephone to a central AP office—of significant news in the immediate area. With AP members located in virtually every area of the state, blanket coverage of the news is assured.

Participating members in the new “actuality exchange” are expected to operate in a similar manner, by telephoning the Washington and Lee center where sophisticated equipment will be ready 24 hours a day to record the “actuality.” The “actualities” will then be made available to every other participating station, which itself can tape the Washington and Lee recording simply by telephoning the service.

The Associated Press purchased and installed all the equipment required for the service. Space was made available by Washington and Lee in Reid Hall, home of the journalism and communications department and WLUR-FM, the University radio station, already an AP member.

Associated Press officers said Washington and Lee was selected as "home" for the new actuality exchange because its journalism department maintains Virginia's only accredited journalism program and because it is centrally located in the state.

Journalism Prof. Ronald H. MacDonald, a veteran himself of almost 20 years in broadcasting before joining the Washington and Lee faculty in 1969, is serving as supervisor for the service. MacDonald has long been active in the Virginia Associated Press Broadcasters Association.

The AP is employing 25 Washington and Lee students, about 15 of them journalism students, all with a demonstrated capability and interest in broadcast journalism. The students carry out technical operations connected with the actuality exchange, including preparation several times every day of capsule descriptions of the "actualities" available, so the AP may advise its membership via the conventional teletype of audio material available by telephone from the Washington and Lee center.

Convention Preliminaries

William Thomas, chairman of the Virginia State Democratic Committee, spoke at Washington and Lee on Dec. 1 in another of a series of visits by notable political leaders, sponsored by the W&L 1972 Mock Convention.

Thomas, at 32, one of the youngest state party chairmen in the country, said that Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine is expected to receive some support from the Virginia delegation to the Democratic Convention at Miami Beach. But he warned the students that it will be more difficult in 1972 to determine how delegations will vote because of new party rules that require state delegations to reflect the proportion of women and blacks residing in the state.

The W&L Mock Convention, which is held every four years for the party out of Presidential power, will be staged May 5-6. The student delegates will try to predict what their actual counterparts will do at Miami Beach. Over the years, the Washington and Lee event has had a remarkable record for accuracy.

W&L's Loyal Parents

Parents of students continue to be among the most loyal supporters of the University. On the weekend of Nov. 5-6, nearly 1,300 parents and guests were present on campus for the 17th annual Parents' Weekend. This was the largest attendance in several years.

The parents participated in small-group sessions with students, faculty members, and administrators, and heard a report on the current state of the University and its future from President Huntley and Stephen W. Robinson of Alexandria, president of the student government. The program also included a meeting of the Parents' Council, headed by Dr. Albert Preston of Kansas City, Mo. His son, Albert Preston, III, is a senior at the University.

President Huntley thanked the parents for their understanding and interest and assured them that Washington and Lee is devoting all of its resources to providing their sons with the best education possible. Robinson discussed the aspects of student life at Washington and Lee, emphasizing that the Honor System continues to be a strong and vital influence on campus.

Last fiscal year the Parents' Fund established a record for gifts made to close the gap between income and expenses in the University's educational and general budget. The fund produced $61,502 in 1970-71 compared with $59,901 in 1969-70. As of Nov. 30 this year, parents had given $21,128 compared with $9,884 for the same period last year and $5,216 for the same period two years ago.

Rail Land Purchased

Washington and Lee University has purchased 8.78 acres of land from the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Co., including the C&O's right-of-way through the University campus, its trestle across U.S. Route 60, and the property across Route 60 on which the long-unused C&O station is located. The University paid $31,500 for the property.

Most of the property—the 5.48-acre right-of-way across the Washington and Lee campus—extends from the boundary with Virginia Military Institute on the north to Route 60 on the south. The C&O abandoned its service from Buena Vista to Lexington following the flood of August, 1969, which destroyed much of the track and a trestle over the Maury River.

The smaller portion of the land involved in the sale consists of approximately three acres across and to the south of Route 60, including the overpass, station, and land around and near the station.

Washington and Lee's only immediate plans for the land south of Route 60 are to use it as additional parking.

The right-of-way on the north side of Route 60 will be used as a road to storage and maintenance facilities and the University's central heating plant. President Huntley said the University is aware of the interest of the Historic Lexington Foundation in restoring and preserving the Lexington station, and he said Washington and Lee intends to make every effort to accommodate that interest with the University's own requirements.

Although the C&O had owned the land, certain portions of it—to the east of the train station—are used as public streets, providing a convenient connection between Route 60 and the Old Colliertown Road and also offering access to the Huger-Davidson Sale Co., Inc. warehouse on McLaughlin Street. President Huntley said Washington and Lee hopes to assimilate these patterns of use with the University's own purposes as well.

Gift of Boxwoods

The University has received a gift of more than 30 large, stately, and valuable English boxwoods. The plants were given by Wilmer S. Poyner of Birmingham, Ala., father of Dr. John S. Poyner, also of Birmingham, a 1962 graduate of Washington and Lee.

The boxwoods have been planted in rows and in groups near the dormitories. One row extends along the parking lot between McCormick Library and the Freshman Dormitory. Another row graces the edge of the sidewalk in front of the dormitory quadrangle facing Washington Street.

Poyner purchased the boxwoods in Wytheville. The University had only to arrange for shipping them to Lexington, acquiring the magnificent plants for a small fraction of their value.

Gift Honors Baremore

The family of Tommy Mac Baremore, a Washington and Lee student who died in a drowning accident in 1968, shortly before he was to have been graduated, has contributed $10,000 to a scholarship fund honoring his memory at the University.

Baremore, a native of Sheveport, La., was an outstanding debater at Washington and Lee and an Honor Roll and Dean's List student. He drowned on March 17, 1968 in the Maury River near Goshen Pass, northwest of Lexington, when he slipped and fell while hiking. Only the day before, Baremore had helped qualify the Washington and Lee debate team for the National Invitational Debate Tournament.

In addition to his academic attainments and achievements in debate, Baremore was an active member of Pi Kappa Phi social fraternity and had been elected vice president of the University's Interfraternity Council his senior year. He was also director of state delegations for the 1968 Mock Republican Convention, held later that spring.

Recipients of the Baremore Scholarships in the current academic year are Lawrence E. Evans, Jr. of Pasadena, Tex., a junior who is an outstanding debater, and Bryan E. McNeill, a sophomore from New Orleans and member of Pi Kappa Phi, Baremore's fraternity.

The fund was established shortly after his death by a group of Baremore's classmates and his family. In awarding the Baremore Scholarships, preference is given to upperclassmen who have financial need and who demonstrate substantial promise of distinction.

Baremore had been "tapped" earlier in 1968 as a member of Omicron Delta Kappa, the national fraternity for campus leaders founded in 1914 at the University. He was a member of Tau Kappa Alpha, the debaters' society; the student Assimilation Committee; the Troubadour Theatre; and the Young Democrats. For two years he served as president of his social fraternity.

He was chosen outstanding freshman debater his first year at Washington and Lee, and the next two years won the coveted Noell-Eckes Trophy, the principal award to a debater. In recognition of his scholarship and academic distinction, the University's faculty voted him a posthumous bachelor of arts degree, conferred during the commencement of his class less than three months after his death.

W&L's Dugout Men

William W. Pusey, III, has been elected to the board of directors of the Lynchburg Baseball Corp., parent organization of the Lynchburg Twins of the Class A Carolina League. Dr. Pusey is professor of Russian and German at Washington and Lee and chairman of the German department.

Only last July 1 he left the administration to return to full-time teaching, after 11 years as dean of the College. Dr.

Pusey has long been a baseball enthusiast, having written a number of reviews and articles on the sport. (On his retirement as dean, W&L's trustees formally noted his devotion to the American pastime by voting him a special, genuine "Golden Glove" trophy.)

His election to the Twins' board brings to six the number of Washington and Lee men on the 24-member board—Dr. Pusey; Lea Booth, former public relations director at the University and currently executive director of the Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges, a 1940 graduate; Joseph C. Knakal, Lynchburg attorney and general counsel for the Twins, a 1957 B.A. and 1959 LL.B. graduate; John Alford, also a 1957 B.A. and 1959 LL.B. graduate; Arnold H. Uggl, class of 1938, manager of purchasing for General Electric in Lynchburg; and Lynchburg attorney Robert Wood, III, a 1962 B.A. graduate.

WLUR Helps Boys' Club

WLUR-FM, the University's student-operated radio station, has donated more than 200 phonograph records to the Lexington-Rockbridge County Boys' Club. Accepting the gift on behalf of the club was Eric Eskildson, its director, who said the 60 boys in the organization "gratefully appreciate" the records.

The Boys' Club is supported entirely by voluntary contributions, primarily through the United Fund. Membership is open to every boy between the ages of eight and 16, and members are eligible to participate in a variety of special programs, including basketball and swimming. WLUR-FM, an operation of the journalism and communications department, is on the air seven days a week during the academic year at 91.5 (FM). Student broadcasters are entirely responsible for its operation, and journalism students at the University provide it with locally gathered news. The station celebrates its fifth anniversary on the air this winter.

Newbolt Gets Grant

W. Barlow Newbolt, associate professor of physics, has been awarded a $2,000 grant by the National Science Foundation to continue his research in electron spectroscopy for chemical analysis.

Dr. Newbolt began the current phase of his electron spectroscopy research last summer. Theoretical design and project design have been conducted at Washington and Lee, with experimentation and practical application being undertaken at Vanderbilt University, where Dr. Newbolt is a member of a research team. A graduate of Berea (Ky.) College and Vanderbilt, Dr. Newbolt has been a faculty member at Washington and Lee since 1962. Previous grants from the NSF, the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, and Washington and Lee have supported Dr. Newbolt's research.

Dorm Rules Relaxed

Freshmen have been given open dorm privileges for weekends, the result of committee votes removing previously established restrictions on the hours during which visitations by women guests were permitted. Technically, the vote was simply to remove previous restrictions on the hours during which freshmen might allow women to visit in the dorms on weekends.

Students in each dorm unit—approximately 12 or 15 men—will continue to vote on open hours for their unit, but now they will be unrestricted by limits on weekends.

The policy change was approved first by the Student Affairs Committee, a five-student, five-faculty group with principal authority in matters of student social conduct at Washington and Lee. That vote was then endorsed by the University Council, which routinely reviews decisions by the SAC. The Council, which has been authorized by the faculty to act on its behalf in all student social matters, is composed of 13 students and 17 faculty and administration members.

The SAC and University Council had previously removed restrictions on open hours for students living in upperclass dormitories. It has also delegated authority to make a similar decision regarding fraternity houses to the Judicial Board of the Interfraternity Council at Washington and Lee. The Judicial Board is that organization's top disciplinary agency.

New Planning Grant

The Lila A. Lilly Foundation of Indianapolis, Ind. has made a grant of $50,000 to Washington and Lee to support the University's long-range planning operations.

Washington and Lee officials are currently engaged in the most extensive appraisal of capital requirements in the institution's history. A new master plan, outlining future campus development and including detailed architectural and engineering proposals, is a primary element in the long-range planning effort.

"Support for our planning is no less a critical need in meeting our educational goals than are the funds for construction itself," President Huntley said. "We are deeply grateful to the Lilly Foundation for its timely gift that we may apply to this vital area."

The Lilly Foundation grant is the second major gift for planning at Washington and Lee in 1971. Earlier in the year the University received $25,000 for planning purposes from the Arthur Vining Davis Foundation.

Debate Society Officer

Lawrence E. Evans, Jr. of Pasadena, Tex., a W&L debater, has been elected vice president of the regional debate society, Delta Sigma Rho-Tau Kappa Alpha. Evans' election came recently at the society's annual debate tournament at George Washington University.

In addition, Evans and a fellow Washington and Lee debater, team captain M. Anderson Bradshaw of Norge, Va., won trophies at the DSR-TKA tournament. Bradshaw took first place negative, Evans second negative. The national debate topic this year concerns government surveillance of private citizens, and every team must be prepared to argue both pro and con.

Freshmen debaters Curtis Boswell of Kingsville, Tex. and Sterling Smith of San Antonio, Tex. tied for fourth place affirmative at the George Washington meet.

Thomas Peard, sophomore from Atlanta, and Bradshaw won the first place award at the annual Elizabethtown (Pa.) College debate tournament recently. In addition, Bradshaw won honors as second best overall speaker in the meet. The two-man Washington and Lee team had a perfect record against teams from Princeton, Lehigh, and Alfred Universities and California State College.

Lacrosse coaches tag Szlasa tops in the college division

Dick Szlasa has been named college division lacrosse "Coach-of-the-Year."

In balloting conducted by the United States Lacrosse Coaches Association, which includes a membership of 300, Szlasa was voted the Babe Krause Award, symbolic of the honor, which was presented to him at the annual convention of the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association in Atlantic City in December. It makes the first time in the Generals' long and colorful athletic history that an award of such national significance has been given to a W&L coach.

Szlasa, a former All-America defenseman at the University of Maryland, in four years has brought about a dramatic shift in lacrosse fortunes on the Washington and Lee campus. Taking over in 1968, his teams suffered through lean records of 2-8 and 1-8 during his first two seasons. In 1970, he produced an 8-3 record, the best mark the Generals had managed since the sport was adopted as part of W&L's intercollegiate athletic program.

Then, last spring, with a team that included what many experts described as the best freshman talent in the country, Szlasa guided the Generals to an 11-2 showing as W&L won the co-championship of the South Atlantic Division, was named the top small college team in the United States, and finished seventh in the Rothstein poll and ninth in the USILA poll, both of which include major and small colleges. The Generals won five Little All-America spots and placed a like number on the all-division squad. It was by far the greatest W&L team accomplishment in recent times.

In developing the Generals into a national power, Szlasa spent long hours on forays to Baltimore, Philadelphia, Long Island, and New Jersey in search of the best high school and prep school players he could find. He has proven to be an outstanding recruiter, so say members of W&L's admissions office, because of his enthusiasm for the University's educational opportunities and his easy-going, natural style with students, parents, alumni, and high school administrators.

Success is almost second-nature to him. When he was at Maryland, he was named to play in the North-South game, selected to the Maryland state collegiate all-star team, and picked to receive the first Silber-Deckman Trophy as the University of Maryland's most improved defenseman.

Following graduation, he began teaching in the Baltimore County public school system, first at Parkville High School, where, during a three-year tenure, he started a lacrosse program. After being recalled to military duty for a year, he became director of athletics and lacrosse coach at Perry Hall High School, where his team was division champions. During the summers, he played defense for the University Club, which won the national open championship in 1963. In 1967, he was appointed lacrosse coach at Towson State College, and immediately produced a 6-3 record, the best mark the school had ever experienced. A year later, he accepted the W&L position.

In accepting the "Coach-of-the-Year" honor in Atlantic City, Szlasa said the recognition properly belonged to all of Washington and Lee and that it reflected a spirit of hard work and determination that was characteristic of the Generals last spring.

3,000 see Generals and Cavaliers inaugurate new basketball arena

At the Christmas break, Washington and Lee's basketball Generals were experiencing some unaccustomed difficulties, compiling a 3-2 record when usually at the time W&L is undefeated or at the worst only one game down in the loss column. The trouble seemed to be a lack of outside shooting and floor leadership coupled with, perhaps, an unfamiliarity with the running game Coach Verne Canfield has installed this winter.

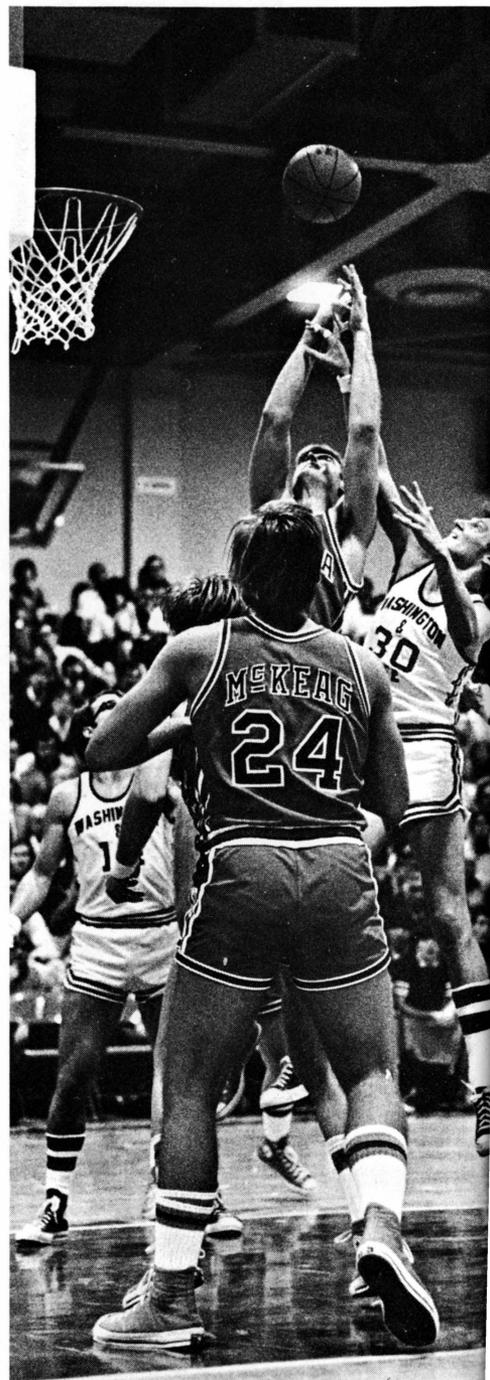

Promising to open things up with more fast breaks and a pressing defense, Canfield let it be known that the Generals were going to have a different look this season. That, along with the opening of the basketball arena in the new expanded area of Doremus Gymnasium, brought out over 3,000 spectators for W&L's inaugural game on Dec. 1 against the University of Virginia.

Among the visiting dignitaries on hand that night were Richard A. (Cap'n Dick) Smith; H. K. (Cy) Young, who threw out the first ball to team captain Mike Daniel; and Edgar F. Shannon, Jr., president of the University of Virginia. Hosting the pre-game ceremony was President Huntley, who also introduced new W&L athletic director Bill McHenry.

Cy Young, who won 16 letters at Washington and Lee, throws out first ball to Generals' basketball captain Mike Daniel.

Cavaliers' Lanny Stahurski and W&L's Skip Lichtfuss battle for rebound.

Unfortunately, the merriment soon ended. Within minutes after the Generals had jumped into a 4-2 lead, Virginia, with guard Barry Parkhill taking command, roared back to go out in front 19-5 when W&L could not hit from the floor. The halftime score was 47-32 in favor of the Cavaliers, who stretched the lead even further before coach Bill Gibson took out the regulars. The final score was 113-80. For Canfield, it was a tough loss because he had said earlier how eager the Generals were for a chance to atone for last year's loss at Charlottesville.

Washington and Lee then hosted its own tournament, and the Generals defeated Lycoming, 107-83, but lost to Drexel, 86-72, in the championship game. Again, the loss was tough for Canfield, since in the two previous W&L Invitationals the Generals had won handily.

Washington and Lee won its next two games, 85-75 over Lynchburg and 82-71 over Hampden-Sydney, to get back over the .500 mark before heading into exams and the Christmas break.

As the Generals returned from vacation, the going didn't appear to be any easier. In successive nights, W&L had to meet an improved Navy team and then Lehigh, with the remainder of the schedule perhaps just as challenging: Jan. 10 at Bridgewater, Jan. 14 at Guilford, Jan. 19 at Emory and Henry, Jan. 22 Florida Presbyterian, Jan. 25 Johns Hopkins, Jan. 28 Rhode Island, Jan. 29 at Baltimore Loyola, Jan. 31 Bridgewater, Feb. 2 at Hampden-Sydney, Feb. 5 Emory and Henry, Feb. 7 Lynchburg, Feb. 9 at Randolph-Macon, Feb. 12 York, Feb. 17 at Dickinson, Feb. 19 Davis and Elkins, Feb. 21 at Belmont-Abbey, and Feb. 25-26 College Athletic Conference Tournament in Lexington.

After warding off early troubles, W&L turns football season around

Even to Buck Leslie, the Washington and Lee football season had to be something of a mystery. At the very beginning, he said publicly that the Generals were going to be underdogs in every game they played, which led most followers to believe the absence of end Steve Mahaffey, who led the nation's pass receivers last year, was more than just the routine graduation loss. It was more like outright disaster.

And through the first four games, W&L succeeded in turning Leslie's pre-season anxiety into a very real problem. Though not outclassed, the Generals failed to make the big play in losing to Towson, 10-7; Centre, 17-7; Hampden-Sydney, 16-3; and Bucknell, 27-0.

"We played well in those games," Leslie said, "and we had chances to win a couple of them. Remember, we were a young ball club at that time of the season. We had to rebuild our offensive line with freshmen and sophomores, and then we had to find receivers to take Mahaffey's place, and also Bruce Green's spot at flanker. Green was more important to us than most people realized," Leslie added.

"And as I said before, our schedule this year was the toughest, in my opinion, we've had since we began playing under the non-subsidized program. Our boys were up against some rugged outfits."

The Bucknell game proved to be a welcome turning point. Outweighed by as much as 40 pounds a man in some interior positions, W&L turned out to be far less a patsy than many sports-writers and other sorts prophesized. Perhaps stunned by early line predictions of a massacre, the Generals allowed Bucknell 20 quick first half points. Then, W&L snapped out of its trance, realized it could stay with the Bisons, and played them close to even during the second half.

"Looking back, I think that was the time everything turned around for us, particularly during the third and fourth quarters," Leslie said. "Although we lost, our team found out it could play in a tougher league."

The Generals went on to take four of their last five games, winning over Western Maryland, 14-7, Sewanee, 21-14, Coast Guard, 28-7, and Washington (Mo.), 38-6. The only loss was to Southwestern, 35-25, in a free-scoring game that featured a 79-yard punt return for a touchdown by W&L safety Dave Brooks. He returned another punt 64 yards, but was caught just short of the goal line.

Among the highlights of the year was the victory over Coast Guard, which knocked the Cadets out of contention for a bid to the Knute Rockne Bowl against Hampden-Sydney. Entering the game against W&L, the Academy had posted an 8-1 record with an explosive offense and a tenacious defense. But the Generals enjoyed their best day of the year in amassing 445 total yards and 24 first downs. "I must say that it was one of the finest wins ever for a Washington and Lee team under our present athletic program," Leslie commented at the end of the season.

With just nine players graduating, Leslie is looking forward to prosperous times next season. Returning will be quarterback Steve Fluharty, who passed for 940 yards and seven touchdowns this fall; end Chappy Conrad, who caught 47 passes and punted for a 40.6-yard average; linebacker Tim Haley, credited with 66 individual tackles and 19 assists; and running backs Jim Farrar, Lat Purser, and Tom Van Amburgh, who together this past season provided the Generals with a combination of power and speed for the first time in years.

At season's end, Fluharty and Conrad were named to the Virginia All-Small College first team, and they were joined by Brooks and offensive tackle Bob Brand on the All-College Athletic Conference first team. Center Ed Kowal, defensive tackles Al McWhorter and Scott Neese, running back JoJo Martin, linebacker Dave Turk, and Brooks were placed on the all-state honorable mention squad.

Conrad was ranked 22nd nationally in receptions, and he finished 13th among the nation's punters.

... then heads downfield as defensive-oriented Tigers close in for the tackle.

Soccer Results

Washington and Lee's soccer team finished its 1971 season with a final 5-6 record. The Generals came on strong to win five of their final seven games. The late-season showing, plus the fact many of the team members will return next year, gives Coach Joe Lyles high hopes for the 1972 season. Sophomores and freshmen dot the soccer roster in abundance.

After dropping their first four games, the Generals then won four in a row—downing Roanoke, 1-0, Hampden-Sydney, 4-0, William and Mary, 3-2, and VMI, 3-0. Washington and Lee dropped a 4-0 decision to a strong Navy team at Annapolis and were edged by Randolph-Macon 3-2 in overtime before defeating Virginia Tech in the final game.

Cross-Country Record

The University's cross-country team closed out its 1971 season with only a 3-7 record, but it improved over last year. "Several of our runners had much faster times than last season," commented Coach Dick Miller, "but our competition was much improved. Cross-country in the state of Virginia is better overall than it has ever been," he added.

A lack of depth was costly to the Generals. "When one of our top men was

GENERAL LEE'S COLLEGE

THE RISE AND GROWTH OF WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY

by Dr. Ollinger Crenshaw, Professor of History

Published by Random House, New York

Price: $10.00

This book may have come as a blessing to revive the great spirit of Washington and Lee. There has never been more to be proud of on the Lexington campus—the book makes this clear.

—Charleston News and Courier

The account is concise, yet rich in detail, with frequent touches of subtle humor. . . . The excellence of this volume fully justifies the enthusiasm with which it has already been received.

—Lexington News-Gazette

A pleasing, witty style and excellent use of quotations enliven the book; descriptions of student activities and vignettes of important persons are particularly interesting.

—The Journal of Southern History

The history of the college is intricately related to the history of the country itself, its prosperity, wars, depressions, changes in attitudes and in manners. Consequently, General Lee's College is a volume that will interest both friends of the college and those readers who are interested in Southern and American history.

—Richmond Times-Dispatch

Alumni of Washington and Lee will appreciate General Lee's College most. It will give pleasure and furnish important insights to all who appreciate the heritage of our state, region, and nation as well as the essential role of higher education in our efforts to cope with this time of turmoil.

—Roanoke Times

This book has deep meaning for everyone who has shared the Washington and Lee experience.

For all, it is an important record of the development of one of the nation's great institutions. Be sure to obtain a first edition copy.
