On the cover: The drawing of Washington Hall bespeaks the charm and lasting beauty of the Washington and Lee Front Campus, which has now joined Lee Chapel in being designated a National Historic Landmark. The drawing, one of a group of campus scenes, was executed by Marion Junkin in 1927, the year he was graduated from Washington and Lee, and is used here through his courtesy. The group of drawings was published in 1933 in the form of a calendar distributed by the University. Dr. Junkin has been professor of art at W&L since 1949.

“A special part of America’s heritage”

The campus of Washington and Lee University has been declared a National Historic Landmark by the U. S. Department of Interior. Washington and Lee is only the third campus in the nation to receive this designation, the highest that can be conferred on a private site by the federal government.

The citation said in part: “Washington and Lee University . . . is composed of architecturally harmonious and spatially related neoclassical buildings that together form one of the most dignified and beautiful college campuses in the nation.

“The central and most significant element of the complex, the Colonnade, along with the flanking faculty residences, gives the impression of being the product of a single architectural concept. But in reality this splendid succession of columned and pilastered buildings is an evolutionary product of a building program extending over nearly 150 years. While the modern University plant exceeds well the historic core, the antebellum buildings have remained the visual symbol and psychological heart of this venerable institution.

“Even though the individual buildings that make up Washington and Lee have gone through extensive changes in the course of their growth and development, the integrity of the University complex as a whole has survived. It is a special part of America’s heritage judged by the Secretary of the Interior to possess significance for all Americans and to be worthy of a place on the Department of Interior’s roll of landmarks commemorating the nation’s past.”

John M. Stemmons, chairman of the Washington and Lee Achievement Council, announced the designation in Richmond on June 2 at a dinner honoring Frances and Sydney Lewis, who recently gave the University $9 million. The Achievement Council, composed of Trustees and several vice chairmen, is providing the leadership for the first phase of the University’s $56-million, decade-long Development Program. The program includes $1.1 million for the restoration and preservation of the historic Front Campus area.

The Front Campus is the second part of Washington and Lee to be declared a National Historic Landmark. Lee Chapel, built by Gen. Lee and the burial place of him and his family was so designated in 1961.

The major elements included in the Historic Landmark designation are:

Washington Hall, built in 1824 by the noted architect Colonel John Jordan, primarily of brick made from earth on the campus itself.

Payne and Robinson Halls, flanking Washington Hall, built in 1831 and 1842 respectively, in the same modified Greek Revival architectural style as Washington Hall.

Four faculty homes, two at each end of the campus, constructed in 1842, one of which is the famous Lee-Jackson House.

Newcomb Hall, home of the School of Commerce, Economics and Politics, completed in 1882 and scheduled for renovation in the Development Program.

Tucker Hall, which currently houses the School of Law, constructed in 1936 to replace an earlier law building that burned in 1934.

The President’s House, built in 1867 under General Lee’s supervision as his postwar home and the home of every Washington and Lee president since then.

The designation will be commemorated later with the official presentation of a National Historic Landmark marker.

by Rupert N. Latture

Old George, campus sentinel, has seen a lot of history

Why is the Washington and Lee campus worthy of being a National Historic Landmark? Rupert N. Latture, professor of politics emeritus and an adviser to President Huntley, gives many of the answers in the following article—with the help of the eyes of Old George.

Recently the occupants of Washington Hall were startled by a strange noise seemingly coming from the top of the building. Old George had just heard exciting news and was trying to dance a jig. At that moment, March 16, 1972, the announcement had been made of a gift of $9 million by Frances and Sydney Lewis to build a magnificent new law school complex on the Washington and Lee campus. This thrilling piece of news was enough to justify Old George's attempt to kick up his heels.

The announcement that affected Old George so deeply leads us to recall some of the interesting happenings occurring within the range of vision of this sentinel of the University grounds.

The statue of Old George is a splendid example of folk art, embodying the likeness of the Father of our Country, who was the first substantial benefactor of Liberty Hall Academy. The statue was carved from a large pine log by Capt. Matthew Kahle, a Lexington cabinet-maker, in 1842. The figure is eight feet tall and depicts Washington wearing a Roman toga.

One of the accompanying pictures shows Old George in a sad state of repair. For more than a century numerous coats of paint protected the statue from the elements. Recently, however, insects have bored into the old pine, thus attracting woodpeckers to dig unsightly holes in their search for tasty morsels.

Scientific treatment has been applied in an effort to halt further depredation and deterioration.

For many years it was customary for members of the freshman class to prove their mettle by climbing up to the cupola to paint Old George green, red, or some garish color. This bold act constituted a challenge to members of the sophomore class who felt obligated to protect the gleaming white figure from any form of desecration, particularly by freshmen. Sometimes dangerous struggles between representatives of the rival classes took place in the limited area around the cupola within sight of uneasy spectators. But now the approach to the roof and cupola is firmly closed against venturesome pranksters.

The college bell is housed in the tower which supports the statue. It has summoned students to classes for more than a hundred years and still performs that function faithfully. In former years, freshmen had the privilege of ringing the bell after football victories thus giving Old George a thorough shaking. That practice was discontinued when the old rope was replaced by an electrically operated device that rings the bell automatically.

What emotions Old George must have experienced in peeking at Maj. Thomas J. Jackson as he strolled among the campus trees, hand in hand with Eleanor Junkin, the fair daughter of Dr. George Junkin, president of Washington College! After Maj. Jackson and Miss Junkin were married, Old George continued to observe Prof. Jackson pass back and forth from the Virginia Military Institute to the home of his father-in-law, where he lived for a time. This residence was later occupied by Jackson's revered chief, Gen. Robert E. Lee, when he later came in 1865 to serve as president of Washington College.

In April, 1861, after two months of debate, the Virginia State Convention voted to secede from the Union. Washington College students promptly raised the "Southern flag" on a pole which they attached firmly to the statue of Old George—whereupon President Junkin asked the students to take the flag down. The students did not act. President Junkin then convened the faculty and asked those gentlemen to order the students to bring the flag down. The faculty did not comply with the request, and a few days later the distraught Dr. Junkin, with part of his family and some of his personal belongings, mounted a carriage and drove speedily into Pennsylvania, where he remained until his death. Several years later Old George looked on when Dr. Junkin's remains were brought to Lexington for burial a few yards from the grave and monument of his illustrious son-in-law, Stonewall Jackson.

In June 1861, a body of Washington College students began military drill under the puzzled gaze of Old George. They were the Liberty Hall Volunteers. These spirited young men were trained briefly, equipped, uniformed, and sent down the Valley to serve as a bodyguard for Gen. Stonewall Jackson. The Volunteers fought as a unit "from Manassas to Appomattox." They participated in numerous battles and were cited a number of times for their bravery in combat. Many of them sacrificed their lives in the service of Virginia and the Confederacy.

On May 15, 1863, Old George was deeply saddened to see the Corps of Virginia Military Institute cadets escorting the body of the beloved Stonewall Jackson back to his home town for burial, following his death from wounds received in the Battle of Chancellorsville. This escentric professor had ridden into lasting fame as a brilliant tactician for his swift and surprising movements of troops in the Valley Campaign and recognition as one of Lee's greatest lieutenants.

A story of truly epic quality is associated in a very special way with Old George, showing why he is regarded as a sort of charismatic symbol guarding the University community. Ki Williams, Class of 1915, relates that one day during his senior year he met Dr. Harry Campbell, dean of the University, in front of Lee Chapel. When asked what he was looking at so intently, Ki replied that he was just admiring the pleasing appearance of the white pillars and pilasters gleaming in the bright sunlight. Dr. Campbell then told him this story! At the time of Hunter's Raid on Lexington in June 1864, Henry A. duPont, a young captain of artillery, was directed to demolish the Virginia Military Institute and Washington College. The guns were turned against the Institute, and the buildings were promptly destroyed and several residences were set on fire. The artillery detail then moved in the direction of Washington College. At this point Dr. Campbell's father, Prof. John Lyle Campbell, arrived and called Captain duPont's attention to the statue of George Washington standing in a stately pose on top of the principal building of the Colonnade. This thoughtful and sensitive officer took a good look at the white-columned buildings resting on the crest of the ridge. He shook his head and declared that he could not bring himself to fire on a building which supported the life-like statue of the Father of our Country, particularly since the building had no military importance. It is interesting to note that among the uninvited visitors to the campus that day were two future Presidents of the United States, Col. Rutherford B. Hayes and Lt. William McKinley. Books, laboratory equipment, and a valuable store of minerals were carried away, but the landmark buildings were spared. A bronze plaque in Washington Hall memorializes Capt. duPont's service to Washington and Lee University. It would strengthen the credibility of this tradition if it had been mentioned in the memoirs of Capt. duPont (later United States Senator from Delaware).

One quiet September afternoon in 1865, Old George caught a glimpse of Traveller walking slowly into Lexington, bringing his famous master who was to begin five years of matchless leadership as president of Washington College. A tender and trustful companionship between Gen. Lee and his noble iron gray mount had developed during their three war years together and was observed repeatedly by Old George as they left the campus in the late afternoons in search of solace along the scenic roads of Rockbridge County. Several weeks after Gen. Lee arrived, Mrs. Lee and members of her family came from Richmond by canalboat to live in what has become known as the "Lee-Jackson house." Two years later Old George kept his eye on the workmen who were engaged in the construction of a chapel under the personal supervision of Lee himself. The chapel occupied a place deep in Lee's heart because it reflected his own earnest Christian faith and his concern for the spiritual life of his students. He was a regular attendant at chapel services, and he maintained his office on the ground floor of the building. By casting his eyes southward Old George was able to observe the building of the residence which was to be occupied by President Lee and his family and by every president since.

Undoubtedly the saddest sight for Old George was the scene at Lee Chapel at the time of Gen. Lee's funeral. Official delegations, the faculty and cadets of V.M.I., the trustees, faculty and students of Washington College, and a host of grief-stricken mourners joined in the procession which moved through the streets of Lexington, to V.M.I. and back to the chapel. The remains of the South's incomparable leader lay buried in the basement of the chapel for 13 years awaiting the erection of the mausoleum where now rest Gen. Lee, his father, Gen. "Light Horse Harry" Lee, and other members of the Lee family.

In 1875, the beautiful Valentine statue was completed in Richmond and brought to Lexington by canalboat. Old George looked on as almost the entire body of Washington and Lee students provided the power to pull the wagon bearing the heavy marble statue from Alexander's Landing to the campus where it was stored. Eight years later when the mausoleum was completed the statue was put in place with an appropriate unveiling ceremony in the presence of many distinguished guests.

In the spring of 1908, Old George saw two strangers arrive on the campus, having driven by carriage from Hot Springs to see Valentine's recumbent statue of Lee and to see what Washington and Lee University was like. They stopped a student on the walk to ask for directions. The polite young man put his books down and accompanied them on an informative tour of the campus. The visitor was so deeply impressed by the courtesy, friendliness and intelligence of the student that when he returned to his brokerage office in New York he wrote his will bequeathing his million-and-a-half-dollar estate to Washington and Lee University. His wife, from her own resources, gave the funds to build a splendid gymnasium in memory of her husband, Robert Parker Doremus. The courteous guide for Mr. and Mrs. Doremus remains the unknown hero of the Washington and Lee students.

Old George experienced a critically anxious hour on the night in December 1934, when fire destroyed Tucker Hall, housing the law school, and all of its contents. Old George was really terrified until firemen from Buena Vista and Staunton assisted the local firemen in their successful efforts to save the adjoining buildings along the Colonnade. He was highly pleased with the new Tucker Hall built to conform in style and appearance with the other buildings along the front campus.

Old George was not the only one alarmed by the Tucker Hall fire; the entire administration was shaken and stirred to action. Soon after Tucker Hall was rebuilt a major restoration of the buildings along the Colonnade was undertaken. The funds required for this project came in a timely bequest from the estate of Judge John Barton Payne, a Chicago lawyer and president of the American Red Cross during World War I. The pine floors, the roof, and all combustible materials were removed; only the original walls were retained. When the restoration was completed the appearance of the buildings remained unchanged.

Old George never tires of listening to the lively band music which comes regularly from the nearby V.M.I. parade ground. He was delighted, therefore, when, during World War II, the School for Special Services came to use the physical facilities of the University to train leaders in information, education, athletics, and entertainment for all branches of the armed forces. At times as many as 1,200 men and women in uniform were housed, fed, and instructed in the University properties. The high moments of those days for Old George were the times when crowds of music lovers gathered in front of Lee Chapel to hear the thrilling concerts presented by many of the popular figures of American music.

From his high perch atop Washington Hall Old George holds a constant eye on the front campus and its landmarks. He keeps watch over the grave of William Graham, the first principal of Liberty Hall Academy. The remains of this pioneer educator lie buried on the north side of Lee Chapel only a few yards from those of his college friend who came to be known later as "Light Horse Harry" Lee, who is buried within Lee Chapel. William Graham and Henry Lee were classmates at Princeton where Graham helped Lee with the mathematics he needed for graduation. When they parted at commencement, Lee thanked Graham for his assistance with his studies and offered to come to his aid at any time in the future. So, when Graham heard that President George Washington was trying to decide what disposition to make of the James River canal stock urged upon him by the grateful Virginia Legislature, he hastened to ask "Light Horse Harry" to present the claims of Liberty Hall Academy. Lee did confer with the President and probably assisted him in the decision to transfer the canal stock to Liberty Hall Academy "to promote literature in this rising empire, and to encourage the arts." In this manner the name Washington became identified with the Academy, then the College, and finally the University.

Directly in front of Tucker Hall and within clear vision of Old George stands an obelisk-shaped monument to the memory of "Jockey" John Robinson, an Irish immigrant who served in the Revolutionary army under George Washington and who followed the example of his hero by bequeathing his estate to Washington College. Indeed the very building on which Old George has stood for 130 years was financed by a gift from John Robinson. To the south of Lee Chapel and in front of Newcomb Hall stands the bronze statue of Cyrus McCormick, who invented the reaper in Rockbridge County in 1831. McCormick gave financial assistance to Gen. Lee's college when it was desperately needed. Old George can see the McCormick statue which was erected in 1931 as a feature of the centennial celebration of the invention of the reaper. He can see the McCormick Library, which was constructed by funds given by members of the distinguished McCormick family.

Old George marveled at the accuracy displayed by President Gaines as he strolled through the campus beheading dandelions with one of his famous canes, particularly the one carried by President Woodrow Wilson when he went before Congress in April 1917 to call for a declaration of war against Germany.

Mentioning Dr. Gaines reminds us of one of the cleverest cartoons ever to appear in a Washington and Lee publication, a sketch by John Chapman in 1947 picturing the president of the University addressing an audience in Lee Chapel and in the background the recumbent statue of Gen. Lee rising on an elbow bending an ear to hear the enchanting language of this renowned orator.

In the summer of 1961, Old George was almost unnerved as he watched the roof of Lee Chapel come tumbling down. Workmen were busy removing the slate shingles so they could be returned to position after the installation of steel rafters. Cement floors replaced the well seasoned pine boards, and other fireproof materials were introduced into the structure. Some of the old timbers had begun to sag, and the fire hazards were alarming. A thorough restoration was required to guard the Chapel against deterioration and possible loss. Funds for this timely and significantly rehabilitation were provided through the generosity of the Ford Motor Company Fund. The Fund's purpose was to preserve a unique and treasured landmark as a source of inspiration to a stream of pilgrims who visit the shrine year after year.

In May 1970, a wave of hysteria swept over college campuses throughout the country when United States troops entered Cambodia. A large number of Washington and Lee students gathered in front of Lee Chapel right under the bewildered gaze of Old George to protest the expansion of the war in Indochina. Student spokesmen made some hastily conceived demands, such as the discontinuance of classes. President Huntley spoke to the excited students, and so did some responsible student leaders. Within a few hours calm prevailed, and the entire episode passed without any violence or disruption of classes.

Old George is visibly moved by the respectful gesture of the neatly uniformed V.M.I. cadets as many of them salute the Chapel and the tomb of Gen. Lee as they pass in front of the Chapel on their way to and from town. The friendly exchange of greetings among Washington and Lee students is a source of pride to Old George, too.

Soon Old George will be confronted with a problem. During all these years his face has been turned to the southeast. Now, how can he see what is going on at his back? A thoroughly modern library is to be erected just behind Washington Hall, almost at Old George's heels. The impressive Lewis Hall and housing units for married and unmarried students will be built across Woods Creek. New roads, bridges, and extensive landscaping will be of exciting interest.

Surely a way will be found to enable the venerable Old George to continue his responsible oversight of the enlarged campus as it expands westward.

Approximately 500 persons gathered at Richmond's John Marshall Hotel on June 2 in tribute to Frances and Sydney Lewis, who last March gave Washington and Lee $9 million in support of the School of Law's portion of the University's $56-million Development Program.

The testimonial dinner, which coincided with the spring meeting of the Board of Trustees, was preceded by a reception given by Dr. and Mrs. John Newton Thomas and U. S. Supreme Court Justice and Mrs. Lewis F. Powell Jr. Dr. Thomas, rector of the Board of Trustees, presided at the dinner. Justice Powell and Lewis are also Trustees.

The occasion brought together many persons prominent in the fields of law, business, politics, and education. Among the guests were members of Virginia's Congressional delegation, representatives of the State Supreme Court and of other state courts of record, members of the State Legislature, commonwealth officials, and numerous heads of Virginia's business, industrial, and banking establishments. Presidents of seven of the 12 colleges which are members of the Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges were present together with many of the Foundation's trustees.

Also attending were the persons who, along with the Trustees, are performing important volunteer work for Washington and Lee, including members of the Achievement Council, the Alumni Board of Directors, Parents' Council, the Estate Planning Council, and the Robert E. Lee Associates.

Prominent among the guests was John W. Warner, a Trustee, who was recently appointed Secretary of the Navy. He had returned just the day before from Moscow, where he had gone to sign a naval treaty with Russia, one of the accords reached during President Nixon's visit to the U.S.S.R.

A highlight of the evening was the announcement by John M. Stemmons that the Washington and Lee campus has been designated a National Historic Landmark. Stemmons is chairman of the Achievement Council, the group of Trustees, other alumni, parents, and friends which has assumed the responsibility of raising $36 million for Washington and Lee by 1976—the first phase of the Development Program. The Lewis gift forms a part of that undertaking. The funds will provide a new law school building to be named Lewis Hall and the initial endowment for a new research center to be named the Frances Lewis Law Center.

Informal remarks were also made to the gathering by University President Robert E. R. Huntley and Ross Malone, the Trustee who is chairman of the Law School Committee of the Achievement Council.

Malone, vice president and general counsel of General Motors Corp., reviewed the heritage of the School of Law and closed with this tribute to the school and to the Lewises:

“Every alumnus of Washington and Lee has good cause to be proud of the Law School, its alumni, the high quality of its faculty and of its student bodies past and present. With that pride there is a loyalty and affection for Washington and Lee on the part of its alumni which is equalled by few if any educational institutions in the country.

“The magnificent gift of Sydney and Frances Lewis, which this occasion commemorates, is inspiring evidence of that loyalty and affection on the part of one alumnus and his wife. I am sure that they would be the first to tell you that this same bond extends throughout the Washington and Lee family, and I am equally sure that the response of our alumni to the Development Program of the University will further confirm the existence and the strength of that bond.

“In closing, may I suggest that the heritage of the Frances Lewis Law Center will be the history of Washington and Lee's Law School and the accomplishments and loyalty of its alumni. The combination of this inheritance with the facilities and opportunities made possible by the Lewis gift promise a great future for the law School. Its future accomplishments will be the ultimate expression of the profound appreciation that we feel to the Lewises tonight."

President Huntley offered his personal assessment of the University's future in relation to the continuing success of the Development Program. He said in part:

"I think that the future of Washington and Lee can be a vision which is consistent with the traditions of its past and can bring to the education of the young people who come to us an opportunity which is consistent with the requirements of this age. This is our vision: To provide an environment in which young people can find an intellectual stimulus and challenge, which brings out in them the best of which they are capable, which provides for them, at the same time, a community in which they can learn to be true men. . . .

"We think Washington and Lee's future is, if not assured, at least bright. We believe this not only because of the generosity of people like the Lewises, but because of the dedication of people like the Lewises, and like the Trustees who have been introduced to you, the faculty who are here tonight, and the friends of this institution who gather around it whenever its needs are great. . . .

"I would utter . . . a word of optimism about education in general and about independent education in particular. This gift and, I think, this vision we have for Washington and Lee is important not only for us, but for the myriad institutions which, like Washington and Lee, are dedicated to the proposition that we must maintain a strong independent sector in the educational world, in Virginia and in the nation. We must do this if we are to have the much bragged about diversity which we claim for higher education in America and if we are to expand that diversity in the multitude of ways which the complexity of our civilization now surely requires.

"Washington and Lee will do its part. We will make our own decisions and set our own goals. We expect to follow no one else in copying what they do. We expect no one else to follow us in copying what we do. We expect each institution of strength to stand on its own feet. We are going to do that and with your help we are going to do it well."

Entertainment was provided by the Washington and Lee Glee Club, whose members remained beyond the end of the academic year to perform at the event. The group presented essentially the same concert it performed for Pablo Casals, at his request, when the singers were in Puerto Rico in April.

Copies of the remarks made at the dinner for the Lewises are available without charge to those who write the Office of Publications.

In addition to Mr. and Mrs. Lewis, members of the Lewis family attending the dinner were:

Mrs. Dora Lewis, mother of Sydney Lewis, secretary and treasurer of Best Products, Inc. a merchandising firm of which Sydney Lewis is president and founder and of which his wife is executive vice president; Andrew Lewis, a vice president of Best and a son of Sydney Lewis, and his wife; Susan Butler, the Lewis daughter, and her husband, Dixon, who flew in from Houston, Tex., where Mrs. Butler is on the fine arts staff of the Houston Chronicle; and Thomas M. Lewis, a brother of Sydney, and his wife.

Mrs. Gaines? She's fine! What McDonald hath wrought

You have probably been wondering how Mrs. Francis P. Gaines is getting along. She is fine, thank you.

Since the death of her husband, the late, great president of Washington and Lee University, she has continued to live at 1 Estill Street in Lexington. She still entertains at occasional dinner parties, reminding her guests of the years during which she served as the gracious hostess in the President's House. Naturally she is frequently a guest at University functions.

Dr. and Mrs. Gaines came to Lexington in 1930 from Wake Forest College where he had been president for three years. After 29 years of outstanding success as president of Washington and Lee, Dr. Gaines retired in 1959. He and Mrs. Gaines built an attractive and comfortable house in Davidson Park. On December 31, 1963, Dr. Gaines suffered a heart attack and died instantly.

True to family tradition, the three Gaines sons, are engaged in education. Dr. Pendleton Gaines, formerly president of Wofford College, is dean of continuing education at the University of Arizona. He directs the activities of the many branches of the university outside of Tucson. Robert Gaines has been coordinator of the public schools in Ayer County, Mass. Dr. Edwin Gaines is associate dean of the University of Arizona. This fall he will be on leave to serve as visiting professor of history at the University of East Anglia, Norwich, England.

Mrs. Gaines has three brothers. Dr. Pierre Robert is a prominent pediatrician in Beaumont, Tex. Associated with him in the practice of medicine is his son, Dr. Pierre Robert Jr., who graduated from Washington and Lee in 1951.

Dr. Joseph Robert was formerly president of Hampden-Sydney College and is now professor of history at the University of Richmond.

Cavett Robert, a 1932 graduate of the W&L School of Law, lives in Phoenix, Ariz., and travels from one end of the country to the other making inspirational addresses to clubs, institutions, and business organizations.

Cavett Robert was recently named "Arizona's Ambassador of Good Will" by Gov. Jack Williams in recognition of his service in carrying the message of the good life in Arizona to audiences throughout the nation. He was presented a citation and an Arizona flag to be displayed on the podiums of the many cities where he appears.

Robert was also the recipient recently of the 1972 Golden Gavel Award of Toastmasters International. The award, the highest in the organization, is presented as a tribute to persons who have distinguished themselves in the field of communication and leadership. His on-stage style has been described as a "mind-boggling mixture of Billy Graham, Will Rogers, and Rhett Butler.”

He is the author of Human Engineering and Motivation and has been a lawyer in New York, a utility executive, and director of one of the nation's largest sales organizations. On July 19, he was the keynote speaker at the Southern Industrial Relations Conference in Atlanta.

McDonald's Mature Oak

The acorn which Walter McDonald of Cincinnati planted 40 years ago has grown into a sturdy oak. McDonald, a Trustee of Washington and Lee from 1945 to 1961, was largely responsible for the establishment at the University of the class agent system, a program that over the years has produced an ever-increasing amount of alumni gifts for the University.

This past year, for instance, nearly 100 class agents volunteered their services, and they and their classmates produced $372,000 in unrestricted gifts in support of the University's educational and general budget. The amount exceeded the Alumni Fund goal for 1971-72 by approximately $12,000.

(A full report on the Alumni Fund and other gifts to Washington and Lee will be carried in a later issue of this magazine.)

This performance and the fact that in the decade of the '70's the University will require nearly $8 million in annual giving if it is to meet the overall goals of its $56-million Development Program emphasize the significance of McDonald's farsighted and dedicated service to Washington and Lee.

In 1931, McDonald, a 1910 graduate of the School of Law, was elected president of the Alumni Board of Directors. The Great Depression was on, and the finances of the University were at a low ebb. The Alumni Association was equally short of funds. McDonald and Cy Young, then alumni secretary, recognized the urgent need for alumni support for all phases of University activity. They decided to do something about it.

After long consideration, McDonald and Young determined upon a plan and procedure for appealing to alumni for assistance on an annual basis. They were aware that the class agent system had been successful at other colleges and decided to introduce the program at Washington and Lee.

McDonald put his heart into the work and a considerable sum of his money. He paid Young's expenses to visit alumni in a dozen cities to stimulate their interest in helping Washington and Lee. Moreover, McDonald brought to the campus at his own expense a competent consultant John Darnall, who spent a year setting up the class agent program, a system under which a member of a class assumes the responsibility for soliciting annual gifts from his classmates.

McDonald's concern and vision were soundly based. For under Cy Young and later under the able leadership of Alumni Secretary Bill Washburn the history of the Alumni Fund has been one of growing success. In 1933, there were 505 contributors giving $3,700. Ten years later, 1,409 alumni gave $12,300. In 1953, the number of contributors had risen to 2,317 and the amount to $48,800. By 1963, the figures were up to 3,905 donors and $140,800 in gifts. Now, 10 years later, the Alumni Fund has approached the $400,000 mark.

Special thanks are due to McDonald, the hundreds of class agents and the thousands of their classmates who have made the class agent program work for Washington and Lee.

Kresge Foundation gives the University $500,000 library challenge grant

A challenge grant of $500,000 toward construction of a new undergraduate library at Washington and Lee has been made by the Kresge Foundation of Birmingham, Mich. To meet terms of the grant, the University must raise the remaining cost of constructing the new facility, estimated at a total of $5.25 million, by 1974.

With the addition of the $500,000 Kresge grant, more than $1.8 million has been committed to the library project, a key element in the University's decade-long development program.

President Robert E. R. Huntley said in announcing the Kresge grant that more than $19.2 million has been committed to date, including the Kresge award, to the initial development goal of $36 million by 1976.

The half-million-dollar Kresge grant is the second major foundation award in recent months to the library project. Announced this spring was a grant of $300,000 from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation.

When it is completed in 1975, the new library building will replace the 64-year-old Cyrus Hall McCormick Library, last remodeled in 1941. Preliminary architectural plans call for a building almost four times the size of McCormick, initially designed to accommodate 120,000 volumes. The new building will have the potential to house 500,000 volumes with study space for 800 students.

"Washington and Lee is deeply grateful for this generous grant," President Huntley said, "because it will help make possible a facility which will be of fundamental importance in the education of every Washington and Lee undergraduate and which will benefit enormously our faculty and other members of Washington and Lee's community.

"But just as important to us is the knowledge that the trustees of the Kresge Foundation have scrutinized our plans and our programs and have judged them deserving of this timely and significant measure of support.

"Because it is the cornerstone of an education of the character and quality of Washington and Lee's," Huntley said, "the library is perhaps the most important capital element in our development program—and second only to annual giving in overall importance and impact."

The overall development effort includes $7.85 million in current gifts to support day-to-day operating costs at the University.

The Kresge Foundation was created in 1924 by Sebastian S. Kresge.

The Washington and Lee development effort is under the leadership of John M. Stemmons of Dallas, an alumnus and Trustee of the University. He is chairman of the Achievement Council, a five-committee group charged with directing and coordinating the program.

Isadore M. Scott of Philadelphia, also an alumnus and Trustee, is chairman of the Achievement Council committee working primarily with foundations in the overall program.

In all, the development program seeks to raise $56-million by the end of the decade.

Mrs. Spence Dies

Mrs. Charles A. Spence, house-mother for the Sigma Nu fraternity for many years, died June 19, 1972, in Roanoke. Mrs. Spence retired in 1963.

New Law Librarian

Peyton R. Neal Jr., librarian of the American University Law School, has been appointed librarian in the School of Law at Washington and Lee University, succeeding Miss Louise Pendleton Moore, law librarian since 1959. Neal began work July 1.

Miss Moore has resigned to undertake a program of law studies at the College of William and Mary.

The new law librarian holds the J.D. degree from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and the B.S. degree in sociology from North Carolina State University. He became Librarian at American University's law school in 1970, after more than two years as associate librarian and acting librarian there. He also held the rank of assistant law professor at American, and will be associate professor in Washington and Lee's School of Law.

Mr. Neal built the American University law collection from 30,000 to almost 90,000 volumes. He also taught a course in legal research and writing, the bibliographic portion of a course in legal methods, and a seminar in copyright law.

He and his wife, the former Elizabeth Aiken of Elizabeth City, N.C., are currently working on a specialized law index to be published next year by Columbia. In addition, Neal is co-author of a book on the architecture of law and medical libraries, scheduled for publication in 1974 by McGraw-Hill.

After graduation from law school, he joined the staff of the Library of Congress as legislative research librarian and legal specialist in the American-British Law Division. In 1967, he affiliated with the U.S. Copyright Office as assistant to the general counsel and assistant librarian.

Active in numerous professional organizations, Neal is chairman of a special subcommittee created by the American Association of Law Libraries on storage and retrieval of legal information and is the AALL representative to the U.S. Copyright Office as well. He is also a member of the American Bar Association and of its committee on revising the general copyright law and has recently been appointed to the ABA's Standing Committee on Law and Technology.

His other memberships include the American Library Association, the American Society for Information Science, the District of Columbia and Federal Bar Association, the Copyright Society of the United States, the Library Automation, Research and Consulting Association, the World Peace through Law Center, and other regional library associations.

Faculty on Leave

Six members of the undergraduate faculty at the University and one professor in its School of Law have been granted leaves of absence for all or part of the 1972-73 academic year.

Conducting research in Sweden will be Dr. Cleveland P. Hickman Jr., professor of biology, on leave for the full year. He will study at the Akademik Sjukhuset in Uppsala.

Also on a full year leave will be Dr. John H. Wise, professor of chemistry and head of that department. He will conduct atomic spectroscopy research at the Argonne National Laboratory in Illinois under that organization's faculty research program.

Peyton R. Neal Jr., law librarian.

James W. H. Stewart, professor in the School of Law, will be on leave for the full year to accept a visiting professorship at Mercer University, Macon, Ga.

Dr. George H. Gilmer, associate professor of physics, will be on leave the full year to conduct research at the Bell Telephone Laboratory, Summit, N.J.

J. Paxton Davis, professor and head of the Department of Journalism and Communications, will be on leave for the first academic term to complete work on a novel he is writing.

Dr. George W. Ray III, associate professor of English, will be on leave for the winter and spring terms to carry out research in England.

Stephen H. Goodwin, instructor in English, will also be on leave the winter and spring terms under a creative writing fellowship from the National Endowment for the Arts.

Mock Convention Oops!

For the first time since before most of its participants were born, Washington and Lee's Mock Convention was proved wrong last summer, when delegates to the real Democratic Convention in Miami Beach chose South Dakota's Sen. George McGovern to oppose President Richard M. Nixon in November.

Washington and Lee's students had picked Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts after seven gruelling ballots—their first wrong prediction about a Democrat since 1912.

It was Sen. Kennedy's steadfast refusal even to consider running that was the Washington and Lee Convention's undoing. He had said all along that he would not accept nomination this year for "any" national office—but Washington and Lee's delegates thought right up to the end that, in the interests of party harmony, he would accept a genuine draft in the event of a deadlock.

They were wrong. Sen. Kennedy's refusal was complete.

Ironically, Washington and Lee's students came within a single vote of the exact number of delegate votes cast for the winning candidate—1,728.5 at Washington and Lee, 1,728.35 at Miami Beach. Just the candidates were different.

With 1,508.01 needed to win, Sen. McGovern received just 1,205.5 on the first ballot at the Mock Convention. Most of the difference between the students' prediction in May and the actual count in July was the accumulation of relatively small inaccuracies in student estimates—McGovern received 15 more from Ohio than W&L's delegates had predicted, four more from Vermont, eight more from Michigan, nine more from Colorado, seven more from Arizona—coupled with some larger misjudgments by the student delegates from New Jersey (McGovern received 67 more Jersey than the 22 W&L's students had predicted), Illinois (he received 84 more), and New York (he received 40 more).

Despite its incorrect prediction in 1972, Washington and Lee's Mock Convention maintains its status as America's most accurate such event, with 10 right out of 15 tries, five of the last six.

Its incorrect guesses have included two Democrats, Kennedy this year and Gov. Judson Harmon of Ohio in 1912, when Woodrow Wilson was the actual nominee —and three Republicans, Sen. Arthur Vandenberg, not just once but twice, in 1936 and again in 1948, and Sen. Charles L. McNary in 1940.

Faculty Appointments

The appointments of seven new members of the faculty at Washington and Lee, effective Sept. 1, have been announced by deans of the three academic divisions.

Named assistant professor of law was Benjamin Murray Vandegrift, currently an associate in the New York firm of White & Case. His appointment was announced by Dean Roy L. Steinheimer of the School of Law.

Named instructor in administration in the School of Commerce, Economics and Politics was Joseph Golsten, formerly of Lancaster, Ohio. His appointment was announced by Dean Edward C. Atwood Jr.

Five faculty members were appointed in the College, Washington and Lee's largest undergraduate division, according to the announcement from Dr. William J. Watt, dean.

Dr. Minor Lee Rogers, a graduate of Virginia Military Institute, was named assistant professor of religion.

Named instructors were John M. McDaniel (anthropology), a Washington and Lee graduate; Patrick J. Frank Jr. (English), and Joseph Earl Blouin Jr. (fine arts).

In addition, Dr. Hugh T. Morgan, a 1972 Ph.D. graduate of Virginia Tech, was named assistant professor of physics for the 1972-73 year only, replacing Dr. George Gilmer, who will be on leave conducting research in the Bell Telephone Laboratory.

Vandegrift holds the B.A. degree from Dickinson College and the J.D. degree from the Georgetown University Law Center.

Golsten, a Ph.D. candidate at Ohio State University, has been an executive in a number of large corporations before returning to work on his advanced degrees.

Rogers, the new religion professor, was born in England and holds the B.S. degree from VMI, his first divinity degree from Virginia Theological Seminary, and the Ph.D. in comparative religion and the history of religion from Harvard University. From 1961 to 1965 he served as a missionary in Japan.

McDaniel will succeed Dr. James G. Leyburn in anthropology at Washington and Lee. A 1964 W&L graduate, he expects to receive his Ph.D. from the Uni-

When a Wrong is Always Right

Maintained this year despite an incorrect Presidential prediction was a secondary W&L Mock Convention tradition—that the University is always very, very wrong in its guess about the vice-presidential nominee.

Students picked Arkansas Rep. Wilbur D. Mills to be Sen. Kennedy's running-mate, making it 15 wrong of 15 tries at guessing who the running mate might be.

In the past, the Washington and Lee Convention has seemed to seek comic relief in the contest for second place, after the intensity and dead-seriousness of the presidential nomination. And the result has been, often as not, a race such as the one in 1940 between Groucho Marx and Gracie Allen.

This time, though, the students seemed to be in earnest, constructing a wholly realistic Kennedy-Mills ticket, balanced in almost every respect—while the Miami Beach delegates played a sort of political version of "Can You Top This?"

versity of Pennsylvania later this summer.

Frank, a native of the Phillipines, is a graduate of the Naval Academy. He holds the M.A. degree in English from the University of Virginia, where he has taught seminars and classes in composition, and he expects to have the Ph.D. from Virginia later this summer.

Blouin is a graduate of Spring Hill College and the University of Georgia, with a major in sculpture.

Golsten, McDaniel and Frank, all Ph.D. candidates, will hold the rank of assistant professor if they complete their doctoral requirements by the beginning of the academic year.

Highland Games Scholar

Larry Franklin Brown of Fort Worth, Tex., a 1972 W&L graduate, has been awarded a Grandfather Mountain Highland Games Scholarship for a year of graduate study at a university in Scotland. He is the first Washington and Lee graduate to receive the scholarship.

His selection was announced by H. Graham Morison, a distinguished Washington, D.C., lawyer who is chairman of the Scholarship Committee. Morison is a 1930 graduate of W&L and a 1932 graduate of the School of Law. He established the Grandfather Highland Games Scholarship program and has been its chairman for 12 years.

The Highland Games are held annually on the McRae Meadows beneath Grandfather Mountain near Linville, N. C., and the event brings together an ever growing number of members of the Scotch Clans in America. Last year about 35,000 people attended.

The annual scholarship is made to the best qualified young man of Scotch descend upon his graduation from an accredited college or university in the Appalachian area of the United States. It provides all of the costs of a year of study leading to a master's degree at an accredited university in Scotland.

Brown graduated with a B. A. degree, cum laude, with a major in politics. He received honors in politics, writing a thesis on "The Great Mistake; The Dysfunctional Electoral College and the Direct-Vote Alternative."

He has applied for graduate study at the University of Edinburgh to seek a master's in political science. After that, he plans to attend law school. One of his aims is to help overcome the apathy of citizens in failing to participate responsibly in the framing of political issues or even to vote in local, state, and national elections.

Morison wrote of him: "It is our hope that Larry Brown's program to become an able and respected lawyer and to become a coherent activist seeking a restoration of the obligation of citizens to participate fully in our democratic process will be fulfilled and that other young men of competence will be encouraged to follow his example. We share his belief that the apathy of our qualified citizens in failing to even vote in our nation constitutes the most serious danger to the preservation of our form of government.

ROTC Camp Visitors

Dr. Edward C. Atwood Jr., dean of the School of Commerce, Economics and Politics, and Dr. Louis W. Hodges, professor of religion, represented Washington and Lee on Educators Day, July 6 and 7, at the First U.S. Army ROTC Advanced Summer Camp at Indiantown Gap Military Reservation, Annville, Pa.

They joined some 180 educators who observed training activities at the camp attended this summer by nearly 2,200 ROTC cadets from 89 colleges and universities in 15 eastern states. Nineteen Washington and Lee ROTC students were scheduled to train at the camp, the largest ROTC encampment in the nation.

On hand to greet the Washington and Lee representatives was Norman F. Lord, W&L professor of physical education, who this summer was colonel in charge of public affairs at Indiantown Gap.

Among the events staged for the visitors were a free-fall parachute drop, the introduction of a special forces team, a repelling demonstration from a hovering helicopter, a helicopter rescue operation, and demonstrations of many types of weapons and vehicles.

Dean Atwood and Dr. Hodges also attended a cookout with the cadets from Washington and Lee.

Emmer is new lacrosse coach; Szlasa takes over at Navy

John S. (Jack) Emmer, who coached Cortland State University to the heights of lacrosse, has been named head lacrosse and assistant football coach at Washington and Lee.

He replaces Richard E. (Dick) Szlasa, W&L's highly successful lacrosse coach who resigned in July to become head lacrosse coach at the U.S. Naval Academy. Szlasa had been at W&L since 1967.

Appointment of the 27-year-old Emmer, announced by W&L Athletic Director William D. McHenry, is effective Sept. 1.

In three years at Cortland State (N.Y.), Emmer coached the Red Dragons' lacrosse team to an overall 32-6 record and the No. 1 college division ranking for the past two years. His 1972 squad posted a 14-2 record, including victories over major powers Army, Navy and Cornell, and advanced to the semi-finals of the NCAA national championship tournament.

Besides his lacrosse duties, Emmer will assist W&L head football coach Graham (Buck) Leslie and serve as an instructor in physical education. His primary responsibility in football will be the Generals' defensive unit.

Emmer was an outstanding college athlete at Rutgers, where he captained both the 1966 football team and the 1967 lacrosse squad, and was named Most Valuable Player of both. He holds the all-time Rutgers records for pass-receiving in a game, season and career. He was an all-East and honorable mention All-America selection and was a 13th round draft choice of the New York Jets.

In lacrosse, Emmer was voted Rutgers' most valuable player and was a second team All-American selection. He played in the 1967 North-South All-Star Game. After graduation from college, he played two years of professional football with the Westchester Bulls of the Atlantic Coast League and several years of club lacrosse with the national champion Long Island Athletic Club.

A native of Mineola, N.Y., Emmer coached for two years in New York high schools before moving to Cortland in 1969. He holds a B.S. degree in physical education from Rutgers and his master's from Cortland.

"We are very pleased to have someone of Jack Emmer's ability at Washington and Lee" said McHenry. "I'm confident he will carry on the high level of lacrosse W&L has enjoyed the past several years under Coach Szlasa."

In the past three years, W&L teams have posted an overall mark of 31-8, and have won or shared two division championships. This year W&L advanced to the quarterfinals of the NCAA championship tourney. Szlasa was named 1971 national "Coach-of-the-Year."

"We are of course sorry to lose an excellent coach such as Szlasa," McHenry said. "We wish him well in his new position at Navy."

Football Optimism

Washington and Lee has a good chance this year of coming up with a winning football season—the first in five years and the second in eight.

"I'm really looking forward to the season," said Coach Graham (Buck) Leslie. "Our spring training went very well, and our early reports indicate that we will have a good group of freshmen coming in."

Among the reasons for optimism:

Washington and Lee lost only nine seniors from last year's team, which posted a 4-5 record.

Thirty-four lettermen—23 of them starters or regulars—return.

The Generals ended last season—one of their toughest in history—on a victorious note, winning four of their last five games, some of them upsets by big margins.

Not all of the news is good. At least six of those nine graduating seniors will be sorely missed, particularly on the defensive unit. And the Generals received no relief from the schedule-makers. There are only two changes in the schedule, with two difficult opponents, Denison and Westminster, replacing two other toughies, Bucknell and Coast Guard.

The list of veteran returnees is headed by senior quarterback Steve Fluharty and his top receiver, senior Chappy Conrad. Both were first-team All-State and All-Conference selections last year.

Fluharty compiled nearly 1,000 yards in offense last season, completing 74 passes for 940 yards and seven touchdowns, and rushing for 26 more. Although he didn't pile up the statistics he had as a sophomore (when he ranked seventh in the country in passing), he was at least as effective. The W&L running game was much better, and Fluharty didn't have to pass on every down.

When he did, it was usually to Conrad. The lanky Richmond receiver grabbed 47 passes for 573 yards and four TDs, good enough to rank 22nd in the country. Conrad also punted for a 40.6-yard average, 13th best in the nation.

Besides Conrad, Fluharty has able receivers in Mark Lane, Bill Baldwin and Rich Romanelli.

The running game also figures to take up where it left off last season. The only serious loss to graduation was JoJo Martin, the leading rusher for the past three years. But returning are the next three rushing leaders, fullback Jim Farrar and running backs Tommy Van Amburgh and Lat Purser.

Probably the biggest plus factor, however, is the return of the entire starting offensive line. Almost entirely inexperienced freshmen and sophomores last year, they took about half the season to become a cohesive unit and then they really began to work well together.

They include Baldwin and Conrad at the ends, All-Conference selection Bob Brand and Buz Walters at the tackles, Archer Frierson, Don Eavenson and Lanny Rainey at the guards, and head-hunting Ed Kowal at center. Kowal, Brand, and Baldwin are juniors; Walters is a sophomore.

The biggest rebuilding job will be on the defensive unit, where graduation took All-Conference safety Dave Brooks and four defensive linemen and linebackers: Al McWhorter, Dan Armstrong, Scott Neese and Mike O'Donnell. But among the returnees are big Jon Markley, a sophomore lineman who batted down at least 10 enemy passes last year as a freshman, veterans Ed McLaughlin in the line, Tim Haley at linebacker and Marshall Washburn in the secondary. Also experienced and likely to start are linemen Bucky Leslie and Johnny Sorrells, linebackers Jim Nolan, Jay Fulcher and

Quarterback Lewis Powell III will back up Fluharty and figures to see a lot of action. He is one of the most accurate passers ever to wear a W&L uniform.

And there's one other plus factor: the Generals will play six of their nine games at home on W&L's Wilson Field.

DR. L. NELSON BELL of Montreat, N.C., was elected Moderator of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. at the General Assembly meeting in June. After attending Washington and Lee, he studied medicine at the Medical College of Virginia in preparation for missionary service in China as a surgeon. In recent years, he has edited Christianity Today and has been a leader of the conservative forces in his denomination. His biography Foreign Devil In China has had wide circulation through the recommendation of his son-in-law, Billy Graham.

1925

After 42 years as a minister in the Florida Conference of the Methodist Church, BRUCE F. GANNAWAY has retired and will live in Lakeland, Fla.

1926

JOHN M. DOZIER JR. retired July 1 as school board chairman for Warwick County and Newport News. He had served continuously for 27 years. He began in 1945 with his appointment to the Warwick board, a unit he headed until its consolidation with Newport News in 1958.

1927

After 43 years of service, BLAYNEY T. WALSHE has retired from the Atlantic City Electric Co., the public utility serving the southern third of New Jersey.

ROBERT C. BURRIS remains active in the public accounting firm of Turner, Burris and Wolf in Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

JOHN V. EDDY, long-time employee at the National Fruit Products, Inc. in Winchester, Va., retired June 30, 1972. He joined National Fruit Products in January 1942, working in the purchasing department. After serving in the Navy, he returned to National Fruit in 1946 as head of the purchasing department and remained in this capacity until his retirement.

After 42 years of service, A. L. ROBERSON retired from E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co. effective August 1, 1972. Holding several executive positions, he was most recently with the credit-treasurer division.

LAWTON M. CALHOUN, a veteran of nearly 40 years in the sugar business, retired July 1 as chairman of the board of Savannah Foods and Industries Corp. He had been president of the company since 1961. Calhoun retired under the company's mandatory retirement plan, instituted under his leadership. The corporation, formerly the Savannah Sugar Refining Corp., has a wholly owned subsidiary in Clewiston, Fla., plus the Jim Dandy Co. in Birmingham, Ala. Calhoun began his career in the sugar business in 1934 with Lamborn & Co. and joined Savannah Sugar Refinery as assistant sales manager in 1940. He has been director, president and/or chairman of several subsidiary companies, president of Atlanta Towing Co., and chairman of Stevens Shipping Co. He is a director of Liberty National Bank, the Trust Co. of Georgia, American Heritage Life Insurance Co. of Jacksonville, Fla. Locally he is a trustee of the Candler General Hospital and St. Joseph's Hospital, a former president of the Chamber of Commerce, president of the Savannah Foundation, a trustee of Savannah Country Day School. On the state level he is a director of the Georgia Cancer Society, the Georgia Safety Council, and is second vice president of the Richard B. Russell Foundation. Calhoun was named Savannah's Industrial Man of the Year in 1970.

J. HOGE TYLER III has retired as chairman of the board of United Virginia Bankshares, Inc., a Richmond-based bank holding company, and as chairman of Norfolk's United Virginia Bank-Seaboard National. He had been chairman since 1967. Tyler served in the Virginia House of Delegates from 1942 to 1944 and in the State Senate from 1945 to 1947. He is past president of Norfolk's Chamber of Commerce and a former director and treasurer of Hampton Roads Maritime Association. Tyler continues to serve as a member of the Executive Committee of Virginia Industrialization Group, as commissioner of the Virginia Port Authority and as a director of the Norfolk General Hospital.

LLOYD C. IREDELL, with 30 years of service, has retired as compliance officer for the U. S. Department of Labor. He was attached to the wage and hour division of the Employment Standards Administration.

E. W. Chittum, '33

The library of Boonton (N.J.) Township Campus of Newark State College was recently dedicated in honor of CHARLES J. LONGACRE, JR. Longacre is director of the college's Division of Field Services which is responsible for part-time and evening study sessions, off-campus operations, the summer session, and other extension facilities.

EDWIN W. CHITTUM, superintendent of Chesapeake Public Schools, was the recipient of the Great Neck Jaycees' 1972 Chesapeake First Citizens Award. He has devoted the past 40 years to education in Virginia. He has held his present post since 1963, when old Norfolk County and South Norfolk merged to form Chesapeake. Before that, he was superintendent of Norfolk County schools. He climbed from teacher, to principal, to instructional supervisor, to superintendent in less than a decade. As Chesapeake superintendent, he has been responsible for a building program which has exceeded $63 million. A Chesapeake elementary school and a high school stadium are named for him. The system is composed of 26,000 pupils, 1,200 professional and 600 nonprofessional personnel and has a budget of $18 million. Chittum was cited for unusual educational foresight and for exceptional administrative ability in meeting the many disputes and other challenges that accompanied the merger of the Norfolk County and South Norfolk school systems. The Chesapeake schools are recognized today as being among the best in Virginia. The Norfolk Virginian-Pilot said editorially that Chittum's "reputation as an outstanding administrator in public education suggests that the award is overdue."

DR. THOMAS H. ALPHIN, formerly with Alabama Medicaid, has moved to the University of Alabama in Birmingham, where he is assistant in the office of Vice President for Health Affairs.

After 37 years in the practice of engineering, 30 years with the U.S. Government Corps of Engineers and seven with Southern Railway, ORAY M. DAVIS JR. is retired and operates an orchard and beef cattle farm in Fauquier County, Va.

ALBERT J. DURANTE is vice president of the Bourbon Institute headquartered in New York City.

E. ANGUS POWELL, chairman of the board of Lea Industries, Inc. of Richmond, has been named recipient of a silver "Brotherhood Medallion" by the National Council of Christians and Jews. Powell, a Presbyterian, was given the award "for his significant contributions to the cause of brotherhood." One of Powell's most recent jobs was co-chairman of a fund raising campaign for the proposed Westminster-Canterbury House, a retirement home sponsored by the Episcopal and Presbyterian denominations. Powell serves on the board of Collegiate Schools, Longwood College and Union Theological Seminary.

CHARLES A. SWEET, senior vice president of the Connecticut Bank and Trust Co., after 26 years with the North Side Bank and Trust Co. of Bristol, has been transferred to CBT's headquarters in Hartford, Conn. He is working with the bank's secretary and counsel. Sweet began his banking career in 1939 with the County Trust Co. in White Plains, N.Y. He was in the Navy before joining the North Side Bank and Trust Co. in 1946; he was named a director in 1948 and president in 1958. LEE BIVINS

LEE T. BIVINS, '38, Amarillo cattleman, civic leader and financier, died July 18 of an apparent heart attack while he and members of his family were swimming in the ocean near Lima, Peru. A member of a pioneer Texas Panhandle and Amarillo family, Bivins played a major role in the building of one of the country's great cattle empires. The Bivins family operated ranches in the Panhandle and New Mexico. A famed ranch, the LIT ranch north of the Canadian River in Potter and Oldham counties, was also a part of the Bivins holdings. Bivins was operating the Excell Ranch in Potter and Moore counties at the time of his death. Last year Bivins was honored by the Panhandle Hereford Breeders Association for 25 years membership in that organization. He was a director of the Tri-State Fair and Amarillo Stock Show Associations. In 1969, Bivins was elected to chairmanship of the Amarillo Mental Health-Mental Retardation Regional Board of Trustees. The Amarillo Globe-Times cited Bivins in 1965 for his work with the Mary E. Bivins Foundation, "for showing genuine trusteeship and responsible community service". His work led to the expansion of facilities at the Amarillo Medical Center, with the addition of the Bivins Memorial Nursing Home.

to Purnell Schottland Hearn on June 10 in Martinsville, Va. Pettyjohn is employed by Fidelity National Bank in Lynchburg, Va.

MARRIED: J. HUDSON ALLENDER to Jeanne Coralie Goodman on June 10 in the Army War College Memorial Chapel. Among the wedding party were ROGER MUNSICK, STEVEN PRIEST, BOB FORRESTER, and ROBERT LARUE. Allender expects to do graduate work in biochemistry at Tulane University.

on October 27 and 28, 1972

ATTENTION! Members of the Academic and Law Classes of 1927, 1937, 1942, 1952, and 1967. You are wanted men—you, and your wives! You are wanted back on the Washington and Lee campus on October 27 and 28 for the Fall Reunion Weekend. An informative and entertaining program is being planned for you, including the 1972 Homecoming activities, topped off on Saturday, October 28, when the Generals play Sewanee in football on Wilson Field.

Invitation and reservation forms will be mailed to members of the reunion classes. But reserve the dates now. Don't miss this opportunity to return with your classmates to Washington and Lee and make this the best Homecoming ever.

ANOTHER

CONFERENCE

NOVEMBER 16-18, 1972

THE TOPIC:

Washington and Lee Today . . .

Its Plans . . . Its Future

Much about your University is changing. It now has exciting plans for continued development. The Special Alumni Conference to be held November 16-18, 1972, is the fifth in a series of such conferences designed to give a relatively small group of alumni a three-day, in-depth look at every facet of Washington and Lee. The conference will feature small-group discussions that bring all points of interest into sharp focus.

Past conferences have been highly successful, enjoyable, and worthwhile.

If you are interested in attending the November conference, please write to William C. Washburn, Alumni Secretary, Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia 24450.

The Washington and Lee University Alumni Directory — 1749-1970

It's a Directory

It's a Document

It's an Answer Book

The new up-to-date Washington and Lee Alumni Directory is now available at only $5.00 per copy, including postage.

Question: Have you ever wondered whether the father, the grandfather, an uncle of one of your classmates also attended Washington and Lee? You'll find this answer and much more in the new Alumni Directory. Every person who attended W&L from 1749 on is listed alphabetically, together with his class, his degree, his address, and his occupation.

Question: Have you ever wanted a full list of the members of your class or any class? You'll find it in the Class Listing section of the Alumni Directory.

Question: Have you ever wondered how many W&L alumni live in Cleveland, in Philadelphia, in Cairo —anywhere? The Geographical List in the Alumni Directory will tell you. If you're passing through, you can look them up.

No Washington and Lee alumnus can afford to be without this valuable reference book in his home or office. Use the form below to order your copy today.
