Research by W&L's Jarrard helps science to understand motivation

Important new clues to understanding motivation — the basis for patterns of eating, sleeping, drinking and certain other animal activity — may result from research being conducted by Washington and Lee psychology professor Leonard E. Jarrard on a small, seahorse-shaped section of the brain called the hippocampus.

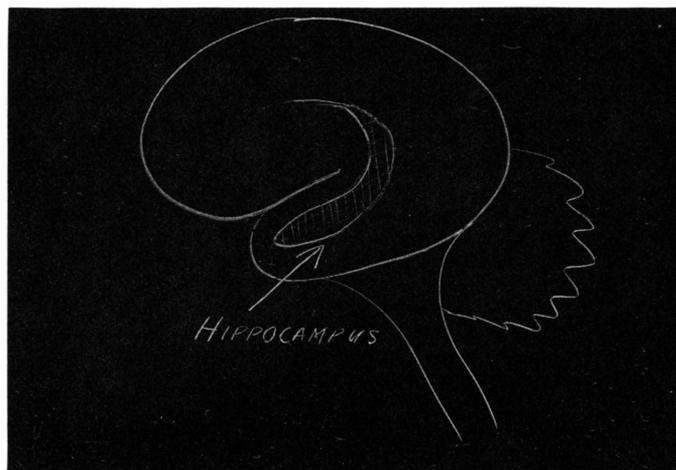

His investigations have indicated that the hippocampus is directly involved in inhibiting or controlling spontaneous activity, hunger, thirst, and perhaps “exploratory” behavior in new environments. Jarrard’s experimental manipulation of certain areas of the hippocampus, where direct two-way nerve connection to other parts of the brain are located, have produced significant alterations of behavior patterns, he notes, especially in levels of eating and drinking.

Though he is cautious about drawing conclusions yet, he observes that the hippocampus — through its “regulatory” or “modulating” role—may provide science with some of the answers to disorders such as hyperactivity, which afflicts children particularly, and even compulsive eating.

Dr. Jarrard has been studying the hippocampus for more than 10 years. Since 1966 his research has been supported by the National Science Foundation under three major grants totaling $147,950.

Rats have been used in most of Jarrard’s research, though from time to time he has also worked with monkeys, and other neuroscientists have used cats in hippocampus studies. While the experimental techniques of various researchers have not always been comparable, he says, the evidence is clear that certain basic functions are the same from species to species. (One significant difference in man, however, is that his hippocampus appears to be directly involved with retaining verbal knowledge—though, of course, the data on humans come from naturally caused or accidental dysfunctions in the hippocampus, not from controlled scientific manipulation.)

Early in Jarrard’s work with the hippocampus, he determined that it is not, as scientists had believed, a “unitary” structure with a single function—but rather that various areas or “fields” influenced different activities. For example, Jarrard has discovered, drinking in rats increases significantly when certain cell fields are stimulated by chemicals or electrical shock—or removed altogether—but is unaffected by identical manipulation of other fields. Various combinations of stimuli, both internal and external, have produced other substantial changes in normal activity and response.

Jarrard’s interest in the hippocampus developed in the early 1960s, when scientists began to understand the connection between disorders in the hippocampus and extraordinary physical activity, such as epilepsy. When drugs fail, epilepsy can be controlled by surgical removal of damaged hippocampal tissue. Rabies too seems to center in the hippocampus, affecting the victim animal by causing degeneration of the structure.

His experimental procedures are exacting and complex. Precise data have to be developed on cells and nerve connections even before experimentation on specimen rats can begin—maps in intricate details, in effect, permitting even the most microscopic nerve to be traced both within the fields of hippocampus and through the brain to its termination in another structure. (The extraordinarily sophisticated slide staining procedure which he must use in his research requires such precision that few laboratories in the country—other than Jarrard’s—are capable of it. Each slide requires two full months of work.)

Sizing each other up: Psychologist Leonard E. Jarrard observes the behavior of an experimental rat used in his research into the hippocampus, the brain's "impulse modulator."

Jarrard's research requires about 60 specially bred albino rats, whose behavioral characteristics are automatically recorded for analysis by computer. At right: Mrs. Maria Hunt, lab technician, prepares section of hippocampal tissue for microscopic examination. Slide-preparation process is so intricate that each one takes two months' work.

Surgery and other experimental manipulations, of course, require no less careful attention. Using mazes, feeding and drinking stations with advanced automatic measuring and recording equipment, and similar laboratory devices, activity is chronicled with minute precision. Behavior can then be analyzed for patterns of frequency and sequence in 15-second time segments, using special computer programs which detect deviations from "normal" activity, determined by subjecting "control" rats in which the hippocampus has not been manipulated to identical stimuli.

Jarrard is aided in his research by a full-time lab technician and, this year, two Robert E. Lee Research assistants, James T. Becker and Curtis E. Boswell, both juniors and psychology majors. Becker is aiding Jarrard in his ongoing research into the specific behavioral functions of different segments of the hippocampus. Boswell and Jarrard are investigating the role of the hippocampus in the ability to discern brightness and in spatial discrimination.

One of the advantages Jarrard says he finds in conducting research at a small, teaching-oriented institution such as Washington and Lee—for he teaches a full load of courses—is precisely that opportunity to work closely and individually with students.

Last November, Len Jarrard went to St. Louis to deliver a research paper entitled "Effects of Interpolated Activity on Short-Term Retention in Rats" before a group of fellow psychological researchers. The unhappy part of it, though, was that it meant the Lexington Quintet's virtuoso trumpeter wasn't in town to play for Parents' Weekend at Washington and Lee.

For he's not only head of the psychology department and researcher of national stature and prolific author and consulting editor to a psychology journal; in his spare time, he's an extraordinarily talented trumpeter. He plays regularly with a couple of groups, but mostly with the Quintet — all of whose members are executives and other professional men, none a musician by trade, who together are one of the most popular and sought-after jazz groups in the area.

One might expect somebody as professionally active wouldn't have any spare time. He teaches courses in first-year psychology ("one of the most rewarding experiences is to introduce students to the field"), physiological psychology (the underlying physical and chemical bases of complex behavior), and psychoactive drugs and behavior (especially in terms of personality).

He is a member of the editorial board of The Journal of Comparative and Physiological Psychology; he has two dozen publications of his own to his credit — most recently a book he edited, Cognitive Processes of Non-human Primates, and a major survey article for Psychological Bulletin on the status of research in America into the hippocampus and motivation. Last spring he was program chairman for the annual meeting of the Midwestern Psychological Association, and he delivers research papers regularly before that and other professional organizations. He's a reviewer for Science, for Psychology and Behavior, and for Learning and Motivation.

He taught at Washington and Lee for seven years before leaving in 1966—temporarily, as it turned out; everybody knew he would return eventually (he even kept his land on the Goshen road) —to teach at Carnegie-Mellon University, where he had received his M.S. and Ph.D. degrees.

After two years at Carnegie Tech he was named chairman of the graduate program in psychology and directed a number of master's theses and doctoral dissertations. He was the psychology department's representative to the Carnegie Tech faculty senate and a member of the senate's executive committee until he decided to return to Washington and Lee in 1971.

What persuaded him to return to Washington and Lee, he says, is its teaching orientation — which, as he himself demonstrates, hardly excludes research. In fact, he observes, basic research is an integral part of the teaching process for students and professors alike. At Carnegie Tech, he recalls, he missed the day-to-day contact with undergraduates.

He succeeded Dr. William M. Hinton as head of the W&L psychology department. (Dr. Hinton had reached 65, the age for mandatory retirement from administrative duties; he continues to teach full-time.) He brought back with him the interest in the hippocampus he'd initially developed while at Washington and Lee — and, to the relief of the Quintet and its audiences, he brought back his trumpet.

"For talent, Len is in a league with Bobby Hackett [Glenn Miller's cornetist]," says Skip Houff, the Quintet's drummer (who has played professionally, and now conducts a popular jazz and big-band music program on WREL in Lexington). "In delicacy of phrasing and tone quality and precision and imagination and thought, he's as good as anybody there is. If he ever wanted to leave teaching he could play with any group in the country. Everybody who's ever worked with him thinks he's a great horn-player and a great guy."

A report from Hillier

Dear Fellow Alumni:

This report will cover the Alumni Board meeting of Nov. 8, 1973, which took place the day that the Sixth Special Alumni Conference began. The conference is covered in a separate report in this issue of the Alumni Magazine.

In addition to the members of the Alumni Board of Directors, the Board meeting was attended by Calvert Thomas, '38A, chairman of the 1973-1974 Alumni Fund drive. The session opened with a welcoming of the new Board members, Al Darby, Chuck Stieff, and Tom Branch. Tom Touchton was absent because of illness.

Farris Hotchkiss, director of University Development, presented a summary of the alumni attitude survey recently conducted by Associates for Research in Behavior, Inc., of Philadelphia. Highlights included: 84% of alumni interviewed would go to W&L if they had to do it over again; 98% received the Alumni Magazine and read or at least glanced through it; 48% thought the University was "extremely well off"; 25% thought it was "fairly secure" and only 8% felt it is in financial trouble (It is in better financial condition than many private colleges, but the current and capital needs are great); alumni give to W&L because of loyalty, gratitude, and appreciation (41%), or sense of charity or obligation (22%) and a desire to keep W&L operating (21%). The executive summary and conclusions of survey were published in the December issue of the Alumni Magazine.

Douglas Schwartz, president of the Student Body, joined the meeting later in the afternoon. Doug outlined some of the programs his Executive Committee has inaugurated to better coordinate student activities on campus and to foster a greater sense of "community" in the student body. He also described the orientation sessions on the Honor System conducted for incoming freshmen and, for the first time, for new law students. Doug then fielded questions from Board members on many phases of current student interest.

Cal Thomas outlined his organization and plans for the 1973-1974 Alumni Fund campaign. The class agents met in Lexington in September in an enthusiastic session, attended by Everett Tucker, '34, as representative of the Alumni Board. Cal's goals are realistic, and, with the help of all of you, will be attained and possibly exceeded.

Frank Parsons, assistant to President Huntley, next gave a presentation on the plans for physical facilities improvements on campus. There will be student apartments for approximately 170 students constructed for occupancy in the fall of 1974. Their location is on the side of the ravine, downstream from the footbridge. Frank also reported on progress of the law school building (close to schedule) and plans for the new undergraduate library. (The library plans are in the detail drawing stage, but still in need of more financial commitments.) He stressed the need for repairs and improvements on the Front Campus, including the four faculty homes all of which are part of the development plan.

Everett Tucker reported for the Distinguished Alumnus Awards Committee. The committee is to hold a special meeting in Atlanta in February to screen candidates.

Prof. Lewis H. (Lash) LaRue of the Law School joined the meeting to discuss the work of the ad hoc faculty committee which is working on a policy recommendation regarding students who may be convicted of felonies. The committee plans to present a tentative report to the University for comment and then a final report. Copies of the tentative report will be furnished to members of the Alumni Board for their sanctions. Lash outlined some of the problems which were of concern to the ad hoc committee and Board members expressed their tentative reactions to some of them. It was a most interesting and useful discussion of a difficult problem.

The next regular Alumni Board meeting is Friday, May 10, 1974, the day before the annual meeting of Washington and Lee Alumni, Inc. on Saturday, May 11.

Sincerely,

BILL HILLIER, '38, President

Reflections on lunch with a vegetarian

... and other thoughts and impressions about the 6th Special Alumni Conference

Tom Branch, an Atlanta, Ga., attorney, is a member of the Alumni Board of Directors. Here he reports on his experience as a delegate to the Sixth Annual Alumni Conference in November. The conference, like those preceding it, was designed to give a small group of interested alumni an in-depth look at W&L's current status, challenges, and outlook for the future. The editors are grateful to Tom Branch for this lively article.

To the best of my recollection, I knew no certified, card-carrying vegetarians during my college and law school years at Washington and Lee. Of course, peanut butter and jelly sandwiches were the main source of protein at most fraternity house lunches, but by and large, students in the generation of the '50s were given to the enjoyment of meat and other products of our environment without much concern about the source of the food. Therefore, I was somewhat surprised to learn that the student seated next to me at lunch during the Sixth Special Alumni Conference, Bryan Baldwin, was a vegetarian. Bryan's costume was of even greater interest to me, consisting of a colorful full-length dress. Bryan was, in fact, a girl, and one of the Hollins College students participating in the student exchange program with Washington and Lee and other colleges. During the course of our conference, I learned from Bryan, the other students, faculty and administration personnel involved that the exchange program is only one of the many recent changes at Washington and Lee, but that on the whole, the University is more like than unlike the University I knew from the fall of 1954 until the spring of 1960.

Sixty-nine alumni, most with their wives, attended the conference in Lexington from Nov. 8 through Nov. 10. The men varied widely in age, several having graduated as recently as the spring of 1973, while others would certainly qualify for membership in the "Old Guard." They came from all over the country and represented a wide variety of occupations and life styles. In short, they were certainly representative of the total body of alumni, and it was soon apparent that they were determined to make themselves heard as well as to hear.

The conference representatives were divided into four groups of approximately 20 men each, and many of the wives attended conference meetings.

The conference dealt with four formal areas of interest—curriculum, development, University governance, and student life. Additionally, a session was set aside for discussion with representatives of the student body in the absence of any persons from either the faculty or the administration.

I will not go into any detail concerning the facts given us about the curriculum, the University's development program, governance, or the present format of student government. Better sources of material on each of these topics is available to you, and you have undoubtedly read a good bit about these matters in the Alumni

Special Conference Report

Magazine and other publications. I do think you might be interested to know the impression we received from the presentations made in these areas.

With regard to curriculum, it is certainly my impression that Washington and Lee is still basically a liberal arts college. I suspect that the vast majority of its graduates are able to read and write, and that many of the students have a desire to do both. I am not sure whether the University has any active giants today, such a Leyburn, Gilliam and Gaines, but someone has been pricking the intellectual curiosity of the students. Therefore, while few trades are taught at Washington and Lee, I am confident that today's graduates are prepared, at least as well as we were, to make their way in the world with thinking minds equal to the many challenges they will face.

Briefly, a word about the new three-term academic year. Many of us went to the conference with the idea that the six-week short term was probably a play period, coming as it does in the spring of the year. We left the conference fairly well convinced that at least as much play does go on in the spring as it did when we were students, happily, but that the short term format aids in making some formal education available at the same time. Particularly, intensive study in the field is made possible in the natural sciences, and the Commerce School has found ways of giving its students brief, though intensive, exposure to the world of business.

All of us were extremely interested in the University's development program, and it was exciting to see the visible evidence of its fruits. Every alumnus who thrilled to a basketball game with the Wahoos in Doremus Gymnasium will be appalled at the vastness of the new basketball court. It would not surprise me greatly if all of the old gym were smaller than the area of the new basketball arena alone. This is not to say that it rivals the palaces of the Atlantic Coast Conference, but there will certainly be no need to ask spectators to press aside in order that a contestant may throw the ball in bounds unimpeded, as was the case in old Doremus.

Many of the alumni who attended the conference had not seen Evans Dining Hall, though its construction had been completed by the beginning of my last year in law school. This building, with its adjoining student activities center, has added immeasurably to the cohesiveness of student life. The Cockpit, the informal dining and beer-drinking area of the student center, is put to considerable use by the student body. It lacks some of the charm of Doc's, The Liquid, and Jabbo's, but then every change in the University cannot represent improvement.

Finally, getting back to the subject of our opening paragraph, students and student life proved to be the most interesting part of the conference. Frankly, though immodestly, I think the alumni representatives were of interest to the students.

I received the impression that today's students contribute substantially more to the day-to-day operation of the school than did students of my generation. Not only do they govern themselves through the Executive Committee, as we did, but they also meet directly with many faculty committees and communicate their ideas and wishes on such matters as the curriculum, campus rules, and the like. The Honor System, having been re-examined in great detail by the students and discussed at length by the alumni, remains alive and well. There was a general impression, however, that too much emphasis in recent years has been placed upon the enforcement aspects of the system, rather than its total existence as a way of life. I think that all questions relating to the Honor System were resolved for the alumni by reflection on its existence as a student tradition, rather than something imposed upon the students by faculty and administration. My own conclusion remains that the Honor System will continue to exist so long as the students want it, and the indications are that this will be for as long as Washington and Lee exists.

While the students do participate more fully in the administration of the University today, I am pleased to report that the faculty and administration have kept a good balance and have not surrendered to passing whims and fancies. This has been possible at our school because of the relative size of the faculty and the student body, coupled with the extremely high quality of both. As in our day, they know and respect each other, though they frequently disagree.

On the question of coeducation, my own impression was that the students, by a small majority, want it. Their reasons for wanting it vary considerably, but most have something to do with the strong attraction the sexes have for each other. Of particular interest to me was the fact that most of the alumni present seemed relatively unconcerned with the whole question. Their feeling seemed to be that the sex of students at Washington and Lee was of less importance than the other things that have made the University great since its inception.

Lest the picture seem too rosy, there are problems in student life today that are frightening to one of my generation. Hard drugs—heroin, amphetamines and the like—are not in evidence and do not seem to constitute a problem of any magnitude at Washington and Lee. However, marijuana is as easily obtainable, and as freely used, as liquor was when I was a student. When I remember that I began my trips to the ABC store when I was only 18, a full three years before the law even permitted me in that building, it is difficult for me to moralize about this particular problem.

Another problem of student life concerns me greatly, and represents the most disappointing information I picked up during the conference. As you know, the University was racially integrated some years ago, though it was extremely difficult to interest outstanding young black men in a traditional, Southern university in a small, mountain community. It had been my hope that the black students would be truly integrated into the University community, and would participate as fully in University life as their white classmates. It seems that this has been possible for only a few of them however, and I found that they tend to stick pretty much to themselves. There is a difference of opinion among the students as to the cause of this resegregation, but it is clear that the problem does exist. On the bright side, I do feel that those black students who have participated fully in the University's life will leave Washington and Lee with an educational experience of immeasurable value to themselves. Moreover, the contributions to the University made by some of these students will be enjoyed for a long time to come.

In summary, and paraphrasing the philosopher, Washington and Lee continues to change to remain the same. President Bob Huntley exemplifies the excellence of the University's past products, but Bryan Baldwin may someday represent the excellence of those who lived and studied in Lexington during the '70s. The thing that worries me most about this, however, is that it will be extremely difficult for me to finance the education of both my daughter, who is now 10, and my son, who is now eight, at Washington and Lee at the same time.

More than $430,000 has been received by Washington and Lee from trusts established by S. Blount Mason, Jr., a prominent Baltimore insurance executive who died in May, 1969, and his wife, who died four months earlier.

Under terms of Mason's will, the trust will be used to strengthen faculty salaries at Washington and Lee. University officials said a professorship in the name of S. Blount Mason, Jr., will be established in recognition of the gift. The holder of the chair will be appointed and announced later by the Board of Trustees.

After attending Washington and Lee from 1901 to 1903, Mason joined U.S. Fidelity and Guaranty Co. of Baltimore and spent his entire business career with that firm. He was named vice president for workmen's compensation and general liability in 1923; he retired in 1949.

He was born in Richmond, a descendant of George Mason, the author of Virginia's Declaration of Rights. His grandfather served as secretary of the Navy, United States attorney general, ambassador to France and president of the 1850 Virginia Constitutional Convention. His father, while a cadet at Virginia Military Institute, fought at New Market.

Sharing with Washington and Lee in the Mason trusts are Woodberry Forest School, which he also attended, and the Church and Home Hospital in Baltimore.

An avid gardener during his lifetime, Mason was also a member of several social and historical organizations, including the Virginia Branch of the Society of the Cincinnati, the Sons of the American Revolution, and the Maryland Club, of which he was an officer for many years.

The Mason gifts bring to more than $5.5 million the amount contributed so far to endowment for salaries, student financial aid, and other yearly expenses as part of Washington and Lee's decade-long $56-million development program. Funds for endowment will account for $24 million of that total, half of it to be achieved by 1976.

Innovative program in religion honors Philip F. Howerton

A major new memorial endowment fund has been created to support a series of innovative programs in the University's Department of Religion.

Aided by a gift of an additional $100,000 from Mrs. Emmie M. Howerton of Charlotte, N. C., the fund — now valued at $150,000 — honors the memory of Mrs. Howerton's late husband, Philip Fullerton Howerton, who died May 19, 1968. He was a former moderator of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S. (Southern), a prominent insurance executive in Charlotte, and a nationally known lecturer both in religion and in many organizations in the field of life insurance in general.

The memorial endowment fund will support a variety of programs at Washington and Lee designed to stimulate an increased examination and understanding of the value of religious faith in modern society and to reinforce the University's basic commitment to what Robert E. Lee once spoke of as "the very marrow of the Gospel," according to Mrs. Howerton.

The Howerton Endowment Program is designed to respond to the requirements of each generation of students and the availability of resources. The fund will be used to sponsor distinguished lectureships in the Department of Religion, to bring scholars to the campus for extended periods during the academic year, to support seminars involving both students and religious leaders, to establish and extend new programs in the study of business and professional ethics in fields such as medicine, insurance, journalism, broadcasting and law, and to acquire important audio-visual teaching materials.

Howerton was the son of a Presbyterian minister, the Rev. James Robert Howerton, who was professor of religion and philosophy at Washington and Lee and head of that department from 1907 until his death in 1924. The elder Howerton was moderator of the Presbyterian Church U.S. in 1907, and his son Philip became moderator 50 years later. Philip Howerton received an honorary doctor of humanities degree from Southwestern at Memphis in 1964.

Philip Howerton was born in Charlotte, but grew up in Lexington and was educated (Class of 1925) at Washington and Lee, where he was a close friend of Dr. John Newton Thomas, who was one class ahead of him. Dr. Thomas, professor emeritus of systematic theology at Union Theological Seminary in Richmond, became a W&L Trustee in 1938 and retired in January as rector of its board.

After returning to Charlotte, Philip Howerton opened his own insurance business in 1935. At the time of his death, his agency was the 12th largest agency in the nation affiliated with Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co. He was a life member of the life insurance industry's "Million Dollar Roundtable."

The programs proposed to inaugurate the Howerton Fund in the immediate future will supplement course offerings in the Department of Religion and other religious-oriented undertakings both within the University's formal curriculum and outside it.

The professional ethics program will encourage investigation of moral issues involved in the fields of medicine, business, insurance, advertising, journalism, broadcasting, law and other fields. The program will serve to extend an unusual interdepartmental examination of biomedical ethics introduced for pre-medical undergraduates in 1972.

Widely known scholars and clergymen will be invited to the campus both for individual lectures and for periods in residence. Films and tape cassettes, useful to both the student and professor, will be acquired under the Howerton Fund as well, to supplement texts and class discussions with documentary studies, unpublished addresses, lectures, sermons, dialogues and panel discussions by recognized religious leaders and scholars from around the world.

New Text by Winfrey

John C. Winfrey, associate professor of economics, is the author of a major new text entitled Public Finance—Public Choices and the Public Economy. It was published in December by Harper & Row.

In the book, Winfrey examines the dilemmas of establishing governmental priorities at several levels as well as ways to finance them in practical terms of current American politics and the balance between the electorate's view of social needs versus self-interest.

The book deals with a wide variety of economic concepts and model systems and their operation under the frequently conflicting pressures from the voting public, the Congress, other governmental bodies, various interest groups, and other sources of influence.

Winfrey's book includes specific examinations of a number of tax sources, including the concept of a negative income tax, levies on property and inheritances, social security taxes, general sales taxes, excise, and corporate taxes.

Of the current notion to replace the sales tax with a European-style "valued added tax," Winfrey writes: "In the United States at least it would seem more sensible to increase the use of the general sales tax" than to replace it if tax increases on goods are necessary.

Winfrey's book also examines "public choices of the 1970's," focusing particularly on the problems of urban blight, mass transit, and the reorganization and consolidation of city governments.

Winfrey has been teaching economics at W&L since receiving his Ph. D. from Duke University in 1965. He teaches courses in public finance and related fields.

Debaters Top Tournament

W&L debaters won seven trophies at the recent regional tournament of the national debate society, Delta Sigma Rho-Tau Kappa Alpha.

Among the trophies they brought home was one named in honor of Washington and Lee's late debate coach, William W. Chaffin, who died in an automobile accident in 1970 while returning from a debate meet in New England. The Chaffin memorial trophy is presented annually to the best overall debate team in the region.

Other awards Washington and Lee men won were first place trophies in both affirmative and negative teams; best combined team, first and second place in extemporaneous speaking, and first place in after-dinner speaking.

Competing in the meet, held at Roanoke College in Salem, were varsity debaters Jay Doyle (affirmative team and extemporaneous awards), Bill Gonch (affirmative team and extemporaneous), Marc Levin (negative team), and Eddie Fisher (negative team and after-dinner).

In addition to teams from W&L and Roanoke, debaters from George Washington and American Universities, the Universities of Virginia and Richmond, the College of William and Mary, and Bridgewater and Madison Colleges competed in the tournament.

The latest victories bring to 10 the number of trophies captured by Washington and Lee debaters so far this academic year.

Davis Biography Available

A definitive new biography of John W. Davis — from which pre-publication excerpts were printed in the Alumni Magazine in April, coinciding with the 100th anniversary of Davis' birth — has just been published by Oxford University Press.

The book is Lawyer's Lawyer: The Life of John W. Davis, and is by William H. Harbaugh, professor of history at the University of Virginia and biographer also of Theodore Roosevelt. The book notes in detail the substantial influence Washington and Lee had on Davis when he was a student (Class of 1895 A&L) as well as the influence he had on the University as a graduate until his death in 1955 and particularly as a member of the Board of Trustees (1921-1948).

Copies of the book, which ordinarily retails at $15.00, may be ordered from the W&L Bookstore for $13.50 plus postage, under the 10 per cent discount rate extended to every alumnus.

A Fraternity Resurgence

Slightly more than two-thirds of Washington and Lee's freshmen pledged a fraternity in fall rush, according to statistics compiled by the Interfraternity Council. The 67 per cent pledge rate is the highest since 1969.

January, 1974

Leading in numbers of pledges was Sigma Chi (33 men), as it has in recent years. Pi Kappa Phi had 26, and Phi Kappa Psi 23.

Other houses and their pledge totals are:

Phi Gamma Delta, 19; Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Phi Kappa Sigma, Lambda Chi Alpha and Phi Delta Theta, all 16; Sigma Nu, 15; Pi Kappa Alpha and Delta Tau Delta, 13; Psi Upsilon and Sigma Phi Epsilon, 11; Zeta Beta Tau, 10, and Beta Theta Pi, nine.

Pledging rates have increased gradually each year since 1970, when just 58 per cent of the freshman class pledged. The next year the rate was 61 per cent, and in 1972, 65 per cent.

Rush was marked by the return of Sigma Phi Epsilon to full fraternity status after two years of semi-inactivity, the result of numerical problems. Its pledge class of 11 is taken by the fraternity as a signal of a successful recovery.

In the fraternity decline of 1969 and 1970, three fraternities were disbanded at Washington and Lee, Kappa Alpha, Kappa Sigma, and Delta Upsilon. Fifteen national fraternities remain active on campus.

New Use for DU House

There will be young feet running through the old Alpha Tau Omega/Delta Upsilon fraternity house in Lexington again, but they won't belong to college students.

The building has been purchased by the congregation of the Lexington Presbyterian Church and will be used as a group shelter home for children who are awaiting assignment to foster parents.

The church purchased the house from the W&L Chapter of D.U., Inc., in the spring of 1973. Work on renovating the structure has been under way for several months, and a target date of March has been established for accepting

Maj. and Mrs. Daniel C. Brittigan and their family moved into the house in December. Mrs. Brittigan will be director of the shelter home. Her husband is an assistant professor of mechanical engineering at Virginia Military Institute.

Plans for establishing the shelter home for children in transit to foster parents were developed by an ad hoc committee of the Presbyterian church. Mrs. C. Westbrook Barritt, wife of the W&L romance languages professor, was chairman of the committee, which worked closely with the Rockbridge Area Social Services Department and the Virginia Department of Welfare and Institutions.

Emmett Poindexter, '20, '23L, is president of the W&L D.U. corporation, and Dr. Lewis G. John, '58, dean of students at the University, is its treasurer. Proceeds from the sale of the house are being held in a savings account against the possibility that the local DU chapter might be reactivated in the future.

ODE Elects Phillips

Dr. Charles F. Phillips, Jr., professor of economics, is the new president-elect of Omicron Delta Epsilon, the international honor society in economics. He was elected to the office at the group's biennial convention in New York in December, held in connection with the annual meeting of the American Economics Association.

He will serve as president-elect and controller of the group, which has 300 campus chapters throughout the world, in 1974 and 1975, becoming president for a two-year term in 1976.

Phillips has been a regional and national director of Omicron Delta Epsilon and at the time of his nomination to be president-elect he was its vice president and editor of its newsletter. Two years ago the society presented him its Outstanding Director award.

Blouin Sculpture Cited

An award-winning sculpture by Joseph E. Blouin, Jr., instructor in art, is among the works making up the Louisiana American Revolution Bicentennial Art Exhibition in the Old State Capitol in Baton Rouge. The exhibition will remain in Baton Rouge galleries through March.

Blouin's work is a marble, steel, and aluminum sculpture entitled "Angel." It was one of 24 works of the 109 on display which received a juror's purchase award. The work will remain a part of the permanent collection of the Louisiana State Art Council and will be shown throughout Louisiana, other states, and in foreign countries.

The Arts Council helped sponsor the exhibition to honor creative Louisiana artists. Blouin is a native of Louisiana and has been a member of the art faculty at W&L since 1972.

Blouin recently experienced another distinction: He was among those invited to attend the spectacular sideways launching into the Mississippi River at New Orleans of a huge new barge-carrying ship built for the Waterman Steamship Corp. The name of the vessel, naturally, is the Robert E. Lee.

Children's Art from Japan

Watercolors and other works by 14 Japanese girls aged six to 12 were on display in the University's duPont Gallery during January. The girls are students in Teikoku Gabuyen Girls' School in Osaka. Their art is mostly about their own school.

The exhibition by the Osaka pupils returns a favor to Washington and Lee in one sense. Three years ago several paintings by Washington and Lee art students were exhibited in Osaka at the International Student Art Show.

Eastman Kodak Grant

Eastman Kodak Co. has made a $3,000 unrestricted grant to the University under its 1973 Educational Aid program. The grant is one of 98 made to colleges and universities in the South and Southwest, and one of 241 made nationwide this year. In all, Kodak announced unrestricted grants totaling $1.1 million to institutions attended by employees of the corporation.

W&L Art Goes International

What does a college department do when it has grown to the limit of its facilities and on-campus resources? It does what an industry does when it sees priceless resources abroad — it expands overseas.

With the cooperation of the several language departments and the classics department, art at Washington and Lee University is doing just that — it is going international.

With the world for its campus, the possibilities for expansion are limitless. There are excellent art museums and art schools in every major city and in many smaller ones. (Sometimes we forget that the largest art museum in the world is the Hermitage in Leningrad, and that the largest art school is in Mexico City.)

For openers, W&L students will have the opportunity beginning this spring of going to the College of Chinese Culture in Taiwan with Prof. I-Hsiung Ju, who was born in China and studied and painted there until the Communist takeover — or of taking a tour of Mediterranean sites important in classical history with Prof. Mario Pellicciaro, who teaches the art and literature of ancient Greece and Rome.

With the group going to the Far East, W&L students will have the option of taking six credits in art history or studio art, or six in spoken Mandarin, or an art-language combination. (Two years of spoken Mandarin are already taught at Washington and Lee.) In a similar manner, students on the Greek-Roman tour may take six credits in art or six in classics, or three in each.

A third new study-abroad program under the art department is scheduled for Mexico in Spring of 1975 under Prof. Gerard M. Doyon, who teaches art and art history. This program will be especially interesting to studio-oriented art students and second-year Spanish students, for it provides six weeks at the world-renowned art school and college of Spanish in San Miguel de Allende, 150 miles north of Mexico City — plus a few days in Mexico City itself, together with tours to ancient sites of pre-Columbian cultures.

Under other study-abroad programs in the six-week Spring Term, Washington and Lee students can study a wide variety of subjects — including art — in England, France, Germany, Spain, Africa and elsewhere. There is also a Spring Term internship program under which W&L art majors work as curators of major museums in Virginia and North Carolina.

Pellicciaro—to the Mediterranean.

So it is hardly difficult to see the day when Washington and Lee art students may find themselves in Beirut, Bombay, even Moscow and Peking — anywhere, in fact, there is art.

Loesel Photos on View

Photographs of Africa by James E. Loesel, instructor in politics, were on display in duPont Gallery at the University in December. Also included in the exhibit were examples of sculpture created by Africans, some pieces of which will be available for purchase.

Loesel, whose field of teaching is in international relations, is a specialist on African political systems. He inaugurated the Washington and Lee Spring-Term "safari" (trip) to several East African nations in 1972 and will take another group of students there again this spring.

Loesel's photographs, taken in Africa, include landscapes, animal photos, and portraits.

Article by Riegel

The new issue of Film Critic, the quarterly of the American Federation of Film Societies, carries an article of criticism by O. W. Riegel, professor emeritus of journalism at Washington and Lee University.

The article, "Karlovy Vary: The Persistence of (Re) Vision," offers Riegel's commentary on the biennial film festival held in Karlovy Vary (Carlsbad) in Czechoslovakia. Riegel discusses more than two dozen films, many entered by communist nations including North Korea, North Vietnam, Cuba, and Soviet Russia.

Up the tub

Who do you call when you can't get your bathtub up on the roof? The fire department, naturally. Actually, Washington and Lee's problem was a huge fishtank, designed to provide a natural environment for the flounder used by biology professor Cleveland P. Hickman, Jr., in his research into the function of the kidney. Flounder are perfectly suited to his work, since their kidneys can function in a wide variety of situations—equally well in salt water and in fresh, for instance. Their old home was a modest old plastic pool, and the fish were . . . well, floundering in it. So a new, more suitable habitat had to be brought in—but not through the doors. A cooperative fire department provided the unusual delivery service to Dr. Hickman's fourth-floor research lab.

7-4 in soccer, 8-6 in cross-country; 'maybe next year' in football

It's becoming almost traditional at Washington and Lee: the fall sports produce successful seasons in soccer and cross-country and "less-than-successful" (read it, losing) results in football.

Such was the case again this past fall, as the soccer team under Coach Joe Lyles posted a 7-4 record and Coach Dick Miller's cross-country runners chalked up an 8-6 record. The W&L football team, under first-year head coach Bill McHenry, suffered through a 2-7 record, its sixth straight losing year and ninth in the past 10.

The football Generals began the year with great success, winning their first two games, and even dared to hope that the recent trend might be reversed. But then they ran into a bunch of fired-up Hampden-Sydney Tigers, who administered a 42-6 shellacking, from which the Generals never seemed to recover. And that old bugaboo, injuries, played a big role as well. Many starters and regulars fell by the wayside to injuries, including starting quarterback Lewis Powell, who was able to play in only three games.

Still, there were some outstanding individual performances. Sophomore quarterback Jack Berry, taking over for Powell, compiled over 1,000 yards (1,009) in passing, completing exactly half of his 188 passes, including six for touchdowns. Another sophomore, Mark George, caught 31 passes for 418 yards, and freshman Tony Perry grabbed 29 for 420 yards and four touchdowns.

Since all return next year, there is hope for a turnaround in W&L's football fortunes.

Senior co-captains Bob Brand (offensive tackle) and Bill Wallace (defensive back) had outstanding years. Wallace was named to the AllState first team, and Brand was chosen for the second team.

In soccer, the Generals opened the year with three straight victories at home and won six of their first seven outings. Then came some tough competition in the Generals' Western Division, and W&L dropped close contests to Lynchburg (1-0) and Madison (1-3). Included among W&L's victims, however, were Virginia Tech (2-1), Roanoke (5-0), VMI

(7-1) and Randolph-Macon (last year's state cochampions) by a 1-0 score.

Individually, the soccer Generals were led by junior Jim Fox, the top scorer with 11 goals, and Rolf Piranian, the defensive standout along with goalie Paul DeVine. Other top scorers were juniors John Embree and John Gaylon. Five players were named to the state All-Star team and played in the annual All-Star game: Fox on the first team and DeVine, Piranian, Embree and back Barclay Armstrong on the second team.

Since all but Piranian are juniors, the prospects continue to look bright in soccer.

Lewis F. Powell, III, the Generals' starting quarterback, talks strategy with Head Football Coach Bill McHenry. Injuries kept Powell from playing in six of W&L's nine games this season—McHenry's first—and the team wound up with a 2-7 record. Other fall-sports teams experienced more successful seasons: soccer went 7-4 and cross-country, 8-6.

The cross-country team had to overcome a severe handicap, since last year's No. 1 runner and course record-holder, co-captain Stu Nibley, was prevented by injury from competing at all. But senior co-captain Bill Kalal and others took up the slack and led W&L to an overall winning record. During the year, victories were recorded over Davidson, Lynchburg and Davis & Elkins, and the Generals placed fourth among eight teams in the state meet.

Along with Kalal, the W&L runners were led by sophomores Mike Burns, Tem Washington and Jim McMenamin, and several freshmen show real promise for the future, including Austin Ball, and Kirk Ruffin.

In the winter sports of basketball, swimming and wrestling, the prospects are favorable in all three. Coach Verne Canfield's basketball team is young (only two seniors) but should continue its winning ways and will be after its eighth straight winning season. The Generals will be led by team captain Skip Lichtfuss, who averaged 19.7 points a game last year and already has gone over the 1,000-point mark in his career with one season remaining.

Swimming coach Bill Stearns has six of seven record-holders back and expects to continue his stretch of winning seasons. Last year, the Generals posted a 10-2 season, won two championships, broke 14 school records and 15 conference marks. The top returnees include Will Brotherton in the butterfly and freestyler Bill Tiers.

Wrestling has a new coach in Gary Franke, and he inherits a veteran squad of 10 lettermen who led the Generals last year to their best record (13-5) in many years. Top returnees include co-captains Jim Stieff and Doug Ford and conference champions Don Overdorff, Lee Keck and Sam Lewis.

The Naval Academy (light uniforms) won this game, but Generals took seven of 10 other soccer contests this fall.

Chapter News

NORTH TEXAS. Alumni of the Dallas-Fort Worth area gathered at the Inn of the Six Flags on Nov. 26 for a gala reception and dinner. Special guests from the University were James D. Farrar, associate dean of students and director of admissions, and Bill Washburn, alumni secretary. Dean Farrar reported on his visits to the local high schools and preparatory schools in connection with W&L's student recruitment program. He also gave an optimistic report on the admissions picture at the University and on other aspects of University life. The chapter was pleased to have present John M. Stemmons, '31, a University Trustee and chairman of the University Achievement Council, which is providing the leadership for the decade-long development program. Mrs. Stemmons was also present. Washburn spoke briefly about the University and the attitudes which prevail throughout the Alumni Association. Present also were Richard D. Haynes, '58, a member of the Alumni Board of Directors, and Mrs. Haynes. All arrangements for the meeting were made by David Carothers, '61, chapter president, who presided and introduced the speakers and other guests.

HOUSTON. Alumni, their wives, and guests gathered on Nov. 27 at the Forest Club for cocktails and buffet. The outgoing president, Fred B. Griffin, '60, made the arrangements, presided, and called upon Ben Ditto, '43, to report for the nominating committee. The following officers were unanimously elected: William B. (Buck) Ogilvie, '64, president; Danny M. Leonard, '70, vice president; Donald B. McFall, '64, secretary-treasurer. Upon taking the chair, Ogilvie paid tribute to Fred Griffin for his outstanding leadership as chapter president. He pledged to continue working for chapter progress and outlined briefly some of the upcoming programs. Bill Washburn, alumni secretary, reported on the status of the University. His talk was followed by a lively question-and-answer session in which many alumni and parents of current students participated.

SAN ANTONIO. Several prospective students and their parents were present for a chapter meeting on Nov. 28 at the San Antonio Country Club. Allan G. Paterson, Jr., '64, chapter president, presided and presented the guests from the University, James D. Farrar, director of admissions, and Bill Washburn, alumni secretary. Dean Farrar, addressing his remarks to the prospective students and their parents as well as to alumni, reported on his visits to area high schools, on the general admissions picture at W&L, and the life of a freshman. Washburn reported on the University's financial status and the progress of the development program. He also stressed the need for alumni help in recruiting student-athletes. Also present was Thomas C. Frost, '50, a University Trustee, who spoke on the Trustees' involvement in the management of W&L. He emphasized the need for the active interest and participation of alumni in the work of the University. President Paterson closed the meeting by outlining plans for the future chapter programs.

NEW YORK. The chapter's annual stag beer and dinner party was held on Dec. 4 at the Cattleman Restaurant on East 45th Street. A large gathering for the event heard reports by Bill McHenry, athletic director and head football coach, and Jack Emmer, head lacrosse coach. Their remarks on the University's athletic program, especially football and lacrosse, was enthusiastically received and prompted a lively question-and-answer period. A film of football highlights was also shown. Bill Washburn, alumni secretary, was present and spoke briefly. During a brief business meeting, the following officers were elected: James O. Mathews, Jr., '70, president, and Emmett Poindexter, '20, secretary-treasurer. The following vice presidents for the divisions of the chapter were also elected: Matthews A. Griffith, '40, New York City; W. L. Webster, '12, Upstate New York; Donald W. Bourne, '51, New Jersey; E. Randolph Wootton, Jr., '64, Connecticut; L. Roper Shamhart, '47, Long Island; and Paul E. Sanders, '43, Westchester County.

RICHMOND. A large number of alumni joined for luncheon on Dec. 6 at the Downtown Club to hear a talk by Dr. Sidney M. B. Coulling, professor of English at W&L. Dr. Coulling's speech dealt with the history of Washington and Lee from its beginning in 1749 through the years following the Civil War and was enthusiastically received. Bill Washburn, alumni secretary, accompanied Dr. Coulling to the meeting.

Sam Dudley, '58, chapter president, introduced the new officers of the chapter and outlined plans for future programs. The chapter expressed appreciation to Dudley for the program and the excellent arrangements for the luncheon meeting.

WASHINGTON, D.C. Members of the chapter were in a festive mood as they gathered on Dec. 28 for a holiday luncheon at the Army-Navy Club. Robert J. Frost, Jr., '68, presided in the absence of the chapter president, J. J. Smith, '60. Frost praised the group for the large attendance and for their role in bringing to the luncheon one of the biggest groups of prospective W&L students in recent years. The principal speaker was Bill McHenry, athletic director and head football coach. He was accompanied by Boyd Williams, assistant football coach, and Bill Washburn, alumni secretary. McHenry's remarks about W&L's athletic program were directed to the prospective students and were warmly received by everyone present. He stressed the need for alumni support in the recruitment of student-athletes. During a short business session, Arthur C. Smith, Jr., '41, reported for the nominating committee, and the following new officers were named: Robert J. Frost, Jr., president; A. Michael (Mickey) Philipps, '64, vice president; Donald W. Sigmund, '59, treasurer. Frost paid special tribute to Arthur Smith, who had served as treasurer for many years. He also recognized Madison Coe, '15, who represented the oldest class at the luncheon. Adjournalment brought best wishes all around for the New Year.

RUDOLPH BUMGARDNER, JR., a prominent attorney in Staunton, Va., died suddenly Dec. 18, 1973. A graduate of V.M.I. and W&L School of Law, Bumgardner was a retired colonel in the U. S. Army, having served in World War II. He was a member of the Augusta County Bar, the board of the United Virginia Bank-National Valley, and held memberships in various Masonic bodies.

1938

THOMAS D. DURRANCE, public relations manager of Texaco, Inc., in New York in the late 1950's and vice president of public relations for the Arabian American Oil Co. in the Middle East from 1960 to 1965, died Nov. 27, 1973, in LeFleix, France. He had retired two years ago from Texaco Europe, Ltd., in Brussels. After serving as a reporter for the Washington Post, Durrance volunteered in 1943 for the American Field Service and was an ambulance driver with the British 8th Army in Africa and Italy. In 1944, he became war correspondent for Time magazine in Italy and in 1945 accompanied the allied forces to Vienna. His subsequent career included service as the Rome bureau chief for Time, senior editor for Kiplinger Magazine and an information specialist for the Marshall Plan. He later became assistant editor of Barron's business and financial weekly, and joined Texaco in 1955.

THOMAS E. LANDVOIGT, JR., an administrator with the Interstate Commerce Commission in Washington, D.C., since 1957, died Oct. 8, 1973. Landvoigt had been with the U. S. Government in various capacities since 1937.
