Miss Parmly, a friend in the Doremus tradition

Miss Ruth Parmly, who has become a major benefactor of Washington and Lee, does not believe a person should try to solve problems on a cosmic scale.

"All you can do is improve your own little niche," she said during a recent conversation with Washington and Lee visitors in her Fifth Avenue apartment in New York City.

In her case, the niche she has chosen to help is Washington and Lee. In January, she made a gift of $1.5 million to the University's endowment to maintain and strengthen its programs in the sciences with special emphasis on physics, physics-engineering, and mathematics. The gift honors her father, the late Charles Howard Parmly, who was a revered teacher of physics and engineering at the College of the City of New York and the founder of CCNY's engineering school. In recognition of the gift, the Trustees of Washington and Lee have named the building housing the biology, physics, and physics-engineering departments Parmly Hall. The building will be formally dedicated to Prof. Parmly's memory during ceremonies next fall.

"I feel happy that my father's name will be remembered and by an institution whose guiding principles he would approve were he here," Miss Parmly said, referring to the University's response to her gift.

Her father's sudden death in 1917 at the age of 48 was a shattering experience for the family. Also it nearly shattered the new department of engineering at CCNY because the department was suddenly left without a head just two weeks before the opening of the fall term. Miss Parmly remembers hearing her mother say, a year later, that three people were then doing the work that had been done by Prof. Parmly alone.

Why did Miss Parmly make such a handsome gift to an institution with which she and her father had no direct connection?

"There may not have been a direct connection," she said, "but there was an indirect one."

She explained that she had been brought up on the story of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Parker Doremus and their unannounced visit to Washington and Lee University in 1913, when an unknown student acted as their guide around the campus. This visit resulted in very large bequests to the University's endowment fund from the estates of both Mr. and Mrs. Doremus in 1915 and later in 1936.

It happened that two sisters of Mrs. Doremus, Mrs. Genevieve Raymond Green and Mrs. Madeleine Raymond Chapman, both of whom lived in New York City, were friends of Miss Parmly's mother, who learned this unusual story through them at the time. Thus when Mr. Joseph Broadus, a W&L graduate and member of the University's Achievement Council, told Miss Parmly recently about the present needs of the University, she already had a sentimental interest in it, in its history, and what it stands for.

Miss Parmly admires Washington and Lee's long-standing commitment to the teaching process, its excellence, and its emphasis on honor among men—the very qualities which her father cherished. She feels too that Washington and Lee throughout its long history has succeeded not only in preserving the strengths it has inherited but also is striving to instill these ideals in those who come after.

"I deplore the modern tendencies," she said in explaining her concern over trends in some segments of higher education that have diminished the teaching processes and submerged the individual in an aimless and undistinguishable mass.

Miss Parmly's earliest memories are associated with educational institutions. Since her father was on the CCNY faculty, academic matters were frequent topics of conversation in her home. Moreover, the north windows of her parents' house on 114th Street overlooked the old Seth Low Library on the Columbia University campus as well as South Field, where the football games were then played.

"That's the picture I grew up with when I was a child," she said.

Speaking of her own education, she said that she had not tried to follow in her father's academic footsteps because her natural inclination tended toward the arts and language rather than towards the sciences.

While still an undergraduate at Vassar College, she attended summer school at the Sorbonne in Paris, where a course on the architecture of the great French cathedrals gave her an abiding admiration for the art and culture of the Middle Ages. Afterwards, while pursuing her French studies at Columbia University, she specialized in 12th-century French literature, choosing as the subject for her master's thesis an analysis of the epic poem La Chanson de Garin le Loherain. It proved a difficult but fascinating task which required her to spend several months of study at the Bibliotheque Nationale as well as to travel to the Bordeaux region of southern France to look over the terrain discussed in the poem.

She obtained her M.A. from Columbia in 1934. Her thesis, The Geographical References in the Chanson de Garin le Loherain, was subsequently published by the Institute of French Studies of Columbia University.

Washington and Lee is named a Bicentennial College Campus

The American Revolution Bicentennial Administration has designated Washington and Lee — the second-oldest college in Virginia and sixth-oldest in the nation — a “Bicentennial College Campus.” W&L is only the second Virginia institution to receive the A.R.B.A. designation. (The College of William and Mary was similarly honored earlier this year.)

W&L was founded in 1749 — 27 years before the signing of the Declaration of Independence. On May 13, 1776, it became the first academic institution in the Colonies to cast its lot with the growing sentiment favoring independence, when trustees of what was then called Augusta Academy formally renamed the school “Liberty Hall.”

W&L’s official American Bicentennial program centers around its own heritage; some of the historical treasures it owns which illustrate the early history of the United States; and its plans to preserve and enhance its traditional position of strength in American education.

Among the specific projects described to the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration as it considered endorsing the W&L observance were these:

- The nationwide tour currently underway of a number of historic portraits once owned by the families of George Washington and Robert E. Lee, including the priceless first portrait ever to have been painted of Washington himself (the Charles Willson Peale portrait, made in 1772);

- Another two-year tour, sponsored by the Smithsonian Institution and also covering the nation, of about 200 pieces of rare Chinese export porcelain from the 18th and early-19th centuries, with decorations that reflect Revolutionary-era political, economic, cultural, religious and aesthetic influences;

- The extensive professional archaeological “dig” at the ruins of Liberty Hall about a mile west of campus;

- A major program to preserve permanently many of the existing records pertaining to W&L’s earliest history.

- The 1976 Mock Democratic Convention planned by W&L’s student body, the 15th such Presidential-election-year affair, already recognized in its own right by the Virginia Bicentennial Commission as an official Bicentennial event;

- Publication of several American Bicentennial-related volumes, including a reprint of Henry Boley’s fascinating (but long-out-of-print) 235-page anecdotal social history, Lexington in Old Virginia, with 48 photos by Michael Miley, “General Lee’s photographer”;

- An arrangement with Wamsutta Mills, which has developed its premiere Spring 1975 line of domestic linens — the “Liberty Hall Collection” — from patterns found in W&L’s Reeves Collection of Chinese Export Porcelain, on sales of which W&L will receive a substantial royalty in support of the University’s educational programs;

● Finely crafted reproductions of nine pieces from the Reeves Collection by arrangement with two leading European porcelain manufacturers, the sales of which will similarly result in a royalty for the University's educational programs;

● A large number of on-campus programs and research activities, ranging from a production next year of the Broadway musical 1776 to extensive studies of early rectors and other figures in the pre-Lee history of the institution;

● And completion in 1976 of the first formal portion of W&L's ambitious "Development Program for the Decade of the 1970s" by achieving that first-phase goal of $36,000,000 (of which more than 75 per cent has been raised to date).

In addition, the campus radio station, WLUR-FM (91.5), recently became the first broadcast facility in the nation to affiliate with the national Bicentennial College Network. WLUR's three-times-a-week feature program, Bicentennial Minutes, is made available to other members of the network under the A.R.B.A.-sponsored project.

The W&L Bicentennial Committee is directed by James W. Whitehead, University treasurer and secretary of the Board of Trustees. The committee's membership includes Dr. I. Taylor Sanders II, official W&L historian and assistant professor of history; Dr. William W. Pusey III, professor of German and former dean of The College (who is undertaking a major study of the Washington College curriculum); Dr. Sidney M. B. Coulling, professor of English (who is researching the administration of his ancestor George Baxter, rector of Washington Academy and Washington College from 1799 to 1826); Dr. Albert C. Gordon, professor and head of the fine arts department; Dr. John M. McDaniel, assistant anthropology professor (and director of the Liberty Hall archaeological "dig"); Dr. Pamela Hemenway Simpson, assistant professor of art history (whose Bicentennial projects include a comprehensive study of W&L's holdings in American art); Maurice D. Leach Jr., head librarian; and students David R. Meschutt, Dries Van Wagenberg and Charles N. Watson Jr., each of whom is involved with a different Bicentennial project.

Washington and Lee's American Bicentennial program is closely aligned with the joint Lexington-Rockbridge County Bicentennial observances, directed by Dr. Leon F. Sensabaugh, professor of history and dean emeritus at W&L.

The University's official commemoration of the American Revolution began in October 1973 with the dedication of the Front Campus as a National Historic Landmark and publication of a brief illustrated architectural history of its historic academic buildings. (Copies of that publication, by the way, are still available free of charge from the W&L News Office.)

With the Front Campus named a National Historic Landmark two years ago and the Lee Chapel similarly recognized in 1963, Washington and Lee is one of the few college campuses in America having received two such designations — the highest honor that can be conferred on a private site by the federal government. (Interestingly, Virginia Military Institute next door, founded in 1839, is one of the others with two Historic Landmarks.)

Shortly after the Revolution, trustees of the peripatetic Liberty Hall Academy petitioned the Virginia legislature for a formal charter with permission to award college-level degrees. They received it in 1782 — the first such charter granted to any academic institution in Virginia by the new state government.

In 1796, George Washington decided to endow the struggling little school in the Valley with the awesome sum of $50,000 in stock — the largest gift ever made to an academic institution in the nation until then. It was literally the salvation of the academy, which had been faced with imminent bankruptcy at the time. Grateful trustees renamed the school Washington Academy in 1798 (and Washington College in 1813), and Washington's gift — still a productive part of Washington and Lee's endowment — has paid a small part of the cost of the education of every student at the University since.

During the first half of the 19th century, the little college survived, but only barely. More than once it was rescued from closing by large gifts inspired by Washington's earlier example.

After the Civil War — which had devastated the college both physically and spiritually — Washington's influence rescued it yet one more time, when trustees audaciously decided to offer the presidency of the institution to Robert E. Lee.

Lee had been offered positions of wealth and power throughout the United States, north and south, and abroad as well. But, according to his family, what nobody offered him until Washington College was the opportunity actually to earn a living — rather than simply to receive money for the idle use of his name. Lee accepted the job for that reason — and because of his lifelong admiration for Washington, who was his wife's step-great-grandfather. Lee proved to be an academic administrator of uncanny ability and foresight, and in the five years before his death he transformed the little-known classical academy into a university of national stature.

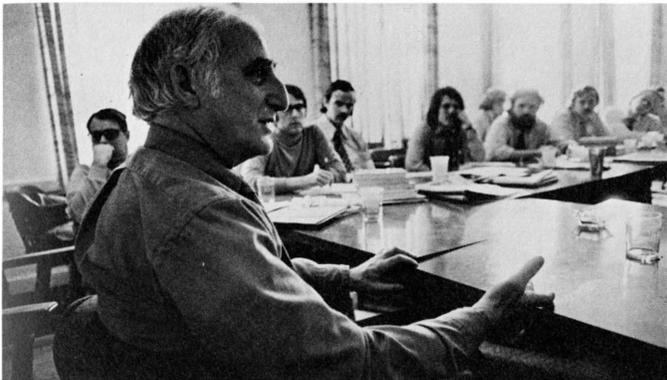

After Lee's death in 1870, the college was renamed again, linking "in fit conjunction," as the trustees' resolution said, "the immortal names of Washington and Lee, whose lives were so similar in their perfect renown, and with both of whom equally by singular good fortune it is entitled to be associated in its future history."

PRE-PROFESSIONAL ETHICS PROGRAMS

□ Separate four-day institutes for working professionals in journalism and law were held this winter at W&L as part of the University's programs in journalistic and legal ethics. Eleven newsmen, four of them W&L graduates, participated in the journalistic-ethics institute. Nine lawyers — all alumni — and one judge took part in the legal-ethics institute.

Both were designed to allow the participants to detach themselves for a time from their day-to-day professional obligations and to reflect in an academic setting on the kinds of ethical and judgment questions they frequently face in their work. They were able to make use of W&L's library resources and other facilities and took part in a number of formal seminars and informal discussion groups.

Participating as a guest lecturer in the journalistic ethics program was Ben Bagdikian, former associate editor and "ombudsman" (in-house critic) of the Washington Post. Bagdikian, who is also the author of The Effete Conspiracy and Other Crimes by the Press, gave a public lecture entitled "Is There Life After Watergate?" and worked with institute participants in classes and seminars.

Former Virginia State Sen. Armistead L. Boothe was a guest lecturer in the legal-ethics institute and delivered an address on "The Lawyer in Society: Today and Tomorrow" in addition to his participation in classes and seminars. Boothe, now development director for Virginia Theological Seminary, was the leader of the anti-Byrd "Young Turks" in the General Assembly in the 1950s and '60s, and opposed the "Organization" candidates in unsuccessful primary challenges for the lieutenant governorship in 1961 and for Harry F. Byrd Jr.'s U. S. Senate seat in 1966.

In addition to the two institutes, the pre-professional programs have brought other speakers to campus this winter, including Norman E. Isaacs in journalism and Geoffrey C. Hazard Jr. in law. Isaacs, associate dean of Columbia University's graduate School of Journalism and newly appointed editor of the Wilmington (Del.) News and Journal, spoke on journalistic ethics in the next quarter century. Hazard, professor of law at Yale University and former executive director of the American Bar Foundation, offered a critique of currently accepted standards of ethical conduct, particularly the American Bar Association's Code of Professional Responsibility.

The journalism and law ethics programs — with parallel programs in pre-medical ethics and in the social responsibilities of American corporations — are supported by a $300,000 grant made to W&L last year by the Lilly Endowment of Cincinnati.

TRUSTEES EXPAND PARTICIPATION OF ALUMNI, STUDENT BODY PRESIDENTS

□ Washington and Lee University's Board of Trustees has expanded the ways in which the presidents of the alumni association and the student body can participate in the Board's activities.

Action taken at the Board's regular mid-winter meeting authorized the University President or the Rector of the Board to invite the president of the Washington and Lee Alumni Association and the student body president to attend meetings of Board committees in addition to the meetings of the Board itself. The purpose of the action is to provide the Trustees with greater input on matters pertaining to student and alumni interests.

The student and alumni presidents will routinely attend meetings of the Board's finance and development committees held in conjunction with the three regular board meetings each year. At the discretion of the President or Rector, they may also be invited to attend meetings of the executive and nominating committees of the Board if such participation appears desirable. As in the case of Board meetings, the student and alumni presidents will not participate in executive sessions if they are held.

Since 1972, student and alumni presidents have attended board meetings with full privileges of discussion, but without the voting privilege reserved only for board members by the University charter and by-laws.

Washington and Lee's Trustee meeting was held Jan. 31 and Feb. 1 in San Antonio, Tex. The Board customarily meets in Lexington for its fall and spring meetings, but mid-winter sessions normally occur off-campus, usually in a location associated with one or more of the Trustees. At the recent meeting, the three Texas members of the board served as co-hosts. They were John M. Stemmons of Dallas, Thomas D. Anderson of Houston, and Thomas C. Frost Jr. of San Antonio.

HILLSIDE APARTMENTS TO GO AT LAST

□ Washington and Lee's Hillside Terrace married-student apartments will be vacated and torn down this summer, 29 years after the barracks-like buildings were constructed as "temporary" housing for World War II veterans and their families.

Eleven of the 18 married students now living there graduate in June, and the University is offering the seven families who remain an opportunity to relocate across town in Washington and Lee's other married student housing area, Davidson Park.

Hillside Terrace was built in 1946 from government surplus building units and as many as 48 student families lived in the 16 original structures. The reduction in the demand for married student housing, originally expected around 1950, did not occur until 1960 when Washington and Lee began tearing down units as the need decreased gradually.

The apartments stand on land leased by Washington and Lee from the City of Lexington at a nominal monthly fee. As W&L units have been retired, other facilities have been built on the site, including offices of the Lexington-Rockbridge Health Department and the area Mental Health Association.

Many former tenants of Hillside Terrace are among now-prominent alumni of Washington and Lee, including the University's President Robert E. R. Huntley, who lived there two years while in law school in the mid-1950s.

The apartments are costing Washington and Lee more in operations and repairs than the University "in good conscience" can charge its student tenants. Although physically unattractive and inelegant, the housing has always been a popular bargain for student families because of low rental charges.

Hillside Terrace is located in an attractive residential area of Lexington about a half-mile from the campus. Washington and Lee frequently was the target of criticism from area residents because of continued use of the apartments which many neighbors judged to be unsightly. But to many hundred of Washington and Lee alumni, these small, drafty, and drab tenements were first homes for them and their brides, where many started their families.

A WINTERFUL OF HONORS FOR SHENANDOAH

□ Two short stories originally published in Shenandoah, Washington and Lee's quarterly review, have been selected as 1975 O. Henry Award winners: "With Che at Kitty Hawk" by Russell Banks and "Angel" by Eve Sharbutt. Both appeared originally in the Winter 1974 issue.

Shenandoah was also selected recently as one of only five "little" quarterlies, subscriptions to which will be donated by The Authors League of America, Inc., to about 900 institutions throughout the country — public libraries, hospitals and prisons.

And the W&L literary review has been awarded a $1,500

GIFT TO LIBRARY

Dr. William Buchanan, professor of politics (left), and Stephen A. Sharp, '69, an attorney, look over some of the thousands of documents which Sharp has donated to McCormick Library. The documents are copies of most of the significant material that was compiled by the Senate Watergate Committee, of which Sharp was a staff member. He prepared the documents for deposit in McCormick. The material also includes many of Sharp's personal notes and memoranda. The collection is a valuable addition to McCormick's research holdings.

matching grant in support of its continuing publication by the Coordinating Council of Literary Magazines.

Shenandoah is edited by James Boatwright III, professor of English. Dabney Stuart, also a professor of English at W&L, is poetry editor, and consulting editors are Reynolds Price and James Dickey.

HUNTLEY NAMED TO SHENANDOAH LIFE BOARD

□ President Huntley was elected to the board of directors of Shenandoah Life Insurance Co. this winter. The Roanoke-based company has $1.8 billion of insurance in force and reported a 32 per cent increase in new insurance last year — almost three times the growth rate of the industry as a whole.

LILLY CONFERENCE IN D. C.

□ Nine representatives of Washington and Lee participated this winter in a conference on the social responsibilities of professional men and women, highlighted by a meeting with President Gerald Ford. The conference was sponsored by the Lilly Endowment Inc. of Indianapolis, which has given funds to Washington and Lee to support major new programs in pre-professional ethics and in the role of the corporation in modern society.

Attending the conference from W&L were President Robert E. R. Huntley; Deans William J. Watt and Edward C. Atwood, Jr., of the College and the School of Commerce, Economics and Politics, respectively; Drs. Louis W. Hodges and Charles F. Phillips Jr., directors of the ethics and corporation programs, respectively; and four students, Benjamin L. Bailey, a pre-law student, Robert Wyckoff Jr., a business student, Earl W. Stradtman Jr., a pre-medical student and John Dahlberg, a journalism student. Each of the students represents a field with programs at Washington and Lee funded by the $300,000 Lilly grant.

NEW BOOK BY COULLING ON MATTHEW ARNOLD

□ Dr. Sidney M. B. Coulling, professor of English, is the author of Matthew Arnold and his Critics, published this winter by Ohio University Press. In the book — which began as Dr. Coulling's Ph.D. dissertation at Chapel Hill — he describes how Arnold's prose was shaped by his desire to answer contemporary criticism. Coulling's major field of research interest and teaching specialty has been Victorian literature with an emphasis on Arnold. Coulling, who has taught at W&L since 1956, is a 1948 B.A. graduate of the University.

OTHER FACULTY ACTIVITY

□ Prentice-Hall has just published a completely revised edition of A Laboratory Companion for General and Comparative Physiology by Dr. Cleveland P. Hickman Jr., professor of biology at W&L, and Dr. William S. Hoar, professor of zoology at the University of British Columbia. The text for the new lab manual was entirely set at W&L by Mrs. Anna Claytor, operator of the University's cold-type IBM Composer system.

□ Dr. Frederic L. Schwab, associate geology professor, is consulting editor in geology for the new Dictionary of Scientific and Technical Terms, published by McGraw-Hill. In recent months Schwab has also been publishing articles and has presented the results to professional conferences of his ongoing research into the ancient history of the Blue Ridge geologic "province."

□ Dr. Jefferson Davis Futch III, professor of European history, was a guest lecturer this winter at Harvard University. He spoke to students in Harvard's Kennedy Institute on the history of ideology in government and academia.

□ An exhibition of 19 sculptures by Joseph E. Blouin, W&L's resident sculptor and instructor in the art department, was on display during March at Radford College. Bouin's show was entitled "Chessmen: Form in Pattern and Regimentation." The works in the show were of cast bronze, aluminum and formed plastics, representing recently expanded technical capabilities in W&L's art facilities.

□ Dr. Gerard M. Doyon, art history professor, has received a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities for research this summer in the history of 18th-century French art. He will conduct his research at the Metropolitan Museum and the Frick Collection in New York.

□ Dr. Charles F. Phillips Jr., professor of economics, has been named to the editorial board of Southern Economic Journal to review manuscripts in the fields of regulation and industrial organization. Phillips has also participated in two symposia on the topic of government regulation in recent months: the Irving Trust Co. Public Utilities Seminar in New York (the sixth time Phillips has been a panel leader there) and a major conference in Kansas City sponsored by the University of Missouri, the Missouri Public Service Commission and Foster Associates of Washington, D. C., a consulting firm.

□ Lee Kahn, assistant fine arts professor and director of the University Theatre, is the new executive vice president of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York and Pasadena, Calif. The Academy is the nation's oldest professional drama school. Kahn has been a member of the institution's executive board since last summer.

□ Pianist James Avery, who has won awards and study grants for his playing from the governments of three nations, presented a concert in February, and one of the pieces he played was "Five Miniatures for Piano" by Robert Stewart, professor of music at Washington and Lee. Avery's appearance was sponsored by the W&L Concert Guild.

□ Also appearing under Concert Guild auspices was the New York Brass Quintet, and on that group's program were two compositions by Prof. Stewart — his "Brass Quintet No. 2 in Three Movements" and "Concerto for Brass with Ripieno Brass and Percussion," both written specially for the New York Quintet.

□ Twenty colorful "paper-cuttings" by a 76-year-old Chinese grandmother, Teng Kung Yun-Chang, were the highlights of an art exhibition in W&L's duPont Gallery in March that inaugurated "Oriental Art Month" at the University, a joint project of the fine arts department and the Chinese Studies Program. Mrs. Teng's paper-cuttings are so realistic and delicate in their detail that they resemble silk paintings.

Later in "Oriental Art Month" a one-man show and demonstration by Prof. Wang Lan of Taiwan and a panoramic exhibition of 30 paintings, all on silk scrolls, by contemporary and recent Chinese masters were on view in duPont.

Congressman
G. William Whitehurst

WHITEHURST GIVES PAPERS TO W&L

□ U.S. Rep. G. William Whitehurst of Virginia Beach, a 1950 graduate of W&L, is giving his Congressional files to McCormick Library. The papers include correspondence, notes, diaries, and memoranda relating to his service in the House of Representatives, beginning in 1968. So far 28 boxes of material have been received for cataloguing and storage. Rep. Whitehurst stipulated in making the gift that no access may be given to or use made of the papers until his death or until he expressly authorizes such access and use. A historian and former dean of students at Old Dominion University, Rep. Whitehurst is serving his fourth term in Congress from Virginia's 2nd District.

LAW, BUSINESS, MEDICINE TOP 1974 CAREER CHOICES OF FRESHMEN

□ Law, business and medicine are again the leading choices among Washington and Lee freshmen when asked their probable career plans.

The figure for lawyers is more than four times the national average among men at four-year institutions. As usual, the figure for future businessmen is about the same as the national men's norm; and, again following the traditional pattern, Washington and Lee's figure for medicine is just about twice the national men's average.

Politically, almost a quarter of Washington and Lee's freshmen characterized themselves as "liberal," almost exactly the same as the national men's average at four-year colleges. But almost 33 per cent at W&L described themselves as "conservative" — more than twice the nationwide average, 15 per cent, among men in similar institutions.

Asked why they chose Washington and Lee, 85.9 per cent said the University's "good academic reputation" was a "very important" reason. Nationally, 55.9 per cent of male freshmen said they had picked their college for that reason.

Each fall, entering students at W&L and at about 300 other four-year colleges and universities throughout the nation are asked to indicate their career aims as they see them at the moment. The survey was conducted by the American Council on Education in cooperation with UCLA.

DEBATERS CAPTURE MORE TROPHIES

□ By the end of March, Washington and Lee's debate team had brought the number of trophies it has captured so far to 21, with recent victories in tournaments held at the U. S. Naval Academy, Loyola University of Chicago and the University of Pennsylvania, as well as in the Virginia Forensic Association State Tournament held at W&L.

FANCY DRESS 1975

The Annual Fancy Dress Ball was back again in all its glory in February. More than 2,000 students, their dates, and other guests swung and swayed in Evans Dining Hall, which was transformed into "The Starlight Club," a 1940s-style nightclub in keeping with the theme "In the Mood." Stan Rubin and his Orchestra, veteran Fancy Dress performers, led the "Salute to the Swing Era."

At the Virginia meet, the W&L team of Marc Levin and Eddie Fisher was named number one in the state. In addition, Rodney Petersen was chosen first in persuasive speaking, and Bill Gonch was first in impromptu speaking in the same tourney. The W&L team also won the State Sweepstakes Trophy.

FULBRIGHT SCHOLAR

□ D. Gardner Britt, a senior pre-medical student, has been named a Fulbright Scholar and will spend next year studying literature in Spain. Britt will receive his B.S. with a major in biology this June.

McCULLOUGH IS STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT

□ Leland G. McCullough III, a rising senior from Shreveport, La., has been elected president of the student body at Washington and Lee for the 1975-76 year.

This year McCullough has been one of two representatives of the junior class on the Student Executive Committee. He is a Dean's List student majoring in both politics and Spanish.

ANOTHER YEVICH AS PHI EDITOR

□ Stephen C. Yevich, a sophomore from Richmond, has been elected editor-in-chief of the Ring-tum Phi for the 1975-76 academic year. An honor graduate of St. Christopher's School, Yevich is a business administration major at W&L. He is an Honor Roll student, is an officer of Pi Kappa Phi, his social fraternity, and is a member of the Young Republicans on campus. This year he has been feature editor for the W&L weekly newspaper.

As editor, Yevich will follow in the footsteps of his older brother Robert H. Yevich of Richmond, who was editor-in-chief of the W&L paper in 1969-70. The older Yevich then worked for Washington and Lee as manager of the University print shop for three years after his graduation.

LECTURES, PERFORMANCES, EXHIBITIONS

□ U.S. Sen. Gary Hart (D.-Colo) spoke in February about the Democratic party's 1976 Presidential prospects, then met with students in informal conversation, all under the sponsorship of W&L's 1976 Mock Democratic Convention.

□ Dr. Claude S. George Jr., associate dean of the Graduate School of Business Administration at the University of North Carolina (Chapel Hill), addressed the 1975 Phi Beta Kappa convocation in March on the topic "The Unexamined Life," taking his title from Plato's observation that "the unexamined life is not worth living."

□ Howard Bird Jr., vice president of Mobil Oil Corp. for international marketing, was in residence at W&L for a week as a visiting fellow, under a program to bring businessmen and other professionals to college campuses for extended periods. The program is sponsored by the Woodrow Wilson Foundation by way of a $1-million grant to it from the Lilly Endowment. Bird met with students informally and in class and engaged in a candid question-and-answer session on oil and energy problems.

□ "The role of the intellectual in the power structure of Communist China" was the subject of a talk given by Dr. Philip Shen, visiting professor at the University of Toronto and, until taking a sabbatical this year, dean at Chung Chi College of the University of Hong Kong and department chairman in philosophy and religion. Dr. Shen's visit to Washington and Lee, during which he met classes in addition to delivering the public lecture, was sponsored by the University's Chinese Studies Program.

□ James M. Cox, professor of English at Dartmouth College, spoke this winter on Nathaniel Hawthorne in a lecture entitled "The American As Artist." Cox's visit to W&L was sponsored by the Seminars In Literature series.

□ Also visiting W&L this winter under the Seminars In Literature program was George Bruce, former master in creative writing at the University of Glasgow and Scottish cultural affairs director for the British Broadcasting Corp. Bruce, a well-known poet, spoke on "that dimension of life which is generally missing in urban societies."

□ Ellen Stewart, who has produced some 500 plays and is currently executive director of La Mama, an experimental theatre, presented a lecture-demonstration entitled "Off to Broadway: National and International Identity."

□ A lecture on the early years of Alexander Calder, the eminent sculptor, was presented by Dr. Joan Marter, assistant professor of art history at Sweet Briar College who has conducted extensive research into Calder and interviewed him several times in connection with her doctoral research.

□ The University Theatre — until lately the Troubadours — presented David Storey's compelling drama, The Changing Room, about lower- and middle-class rugby players in Yorkshire and the brutality, psychological perhaps as much as physical, they willingly accept on the field and in the "changing room" itself. The production was as naturalistic as possible, and one way that goal was attained was by thorough instruction in the peculiarities of the Yorkshire dialect by Deborah Ross, voice coach of the American Academy of the Dramatic Arts, of which University Theatre Director Lee Kahn is the newly appointed executive vice president.

TELETHON MEANS FUN AND MONEY

"That was really a lot of fun. I hadn't talked with some of those guys since we graduated. I hope I'll be asked to help again next year."

This comment by one of the callers seemed to sum up the attitude of all who worked at the Alumni Fund Telethon conducted from Richmond on the evenings of March 4, 5, and 6.

Over the three evenings, a total of 78 alumni (17 of them accompanied by their ladies) spent three hours a night calling classmates all over the country on behalf of the 1974-75 Alumni Fund. They made 897 calls and talked to 527 alumni. Of those alumni reached, 462 (88%) made pledges to the Alumni Fund. Of those pledging, 330 named specific amounts which totaled $38,985. The largest single pledge was for $10,250.

Alumni Fund Vice Chairman L. Gordon Miller, '45, was in charge of the telethon, which was conducted from the offices of Wheat First Securities in Richmond. Miller is senior vice president of Wheat.

Most of the callers were from Richmond, but several came from out of town. Among these were Alumni Fund Chairman Calvert Thomas, '38, from New York; Vice Chairman Herbert G. Jahncke, '30, from New Orleans; Vice Chairman Russell G. Browning, '42, from Newark; Vice Chairman Oliver M. Mendell, '50, from New York; Class Agent Earl T. Jones, '30, from Raleigh, N.C.; and Class Agent William R. Johnston, '61, from Morristown, N.J. Alumni Fund Vice Chairmen William C. Washburn, '40, from Lexington, and J. Carter Fox, '61, from West Point, Va., also attended.

The $38,985 represents the minimum amount pledged because only those pledges for a specific amount were counted in arriving at this total. None of the pledges will be counted in the Alumni Fund until they are actually received in Lexington.

An equine Cinderella tale: Ole Dennis, Ole Do Right, and Ole Jack Warner

This is the story of a horse named Do Right, and if you saw it in a movie you wouldn't believe it for a minute. But it's true, every word.

Simply put, Do Right is the finest jumper in the world. Period. And Dennis Murphy, a sharecropper's son who worked in a filling station until about five years ago, is the jockey who trained Do Right and rides him now to (ahem) new heights. Together, Do Right and Dennis are the talk of the horsey set.

Do Right is owned by W&L Trustee Jack Warner, a 1941 graduate and the colorful president of Gulf States Paper Corp. of Tuscaloosa, Ala. Dennis came to work a few years back for the forestry division of one of Gulf States' subsidiaries. Well, one of the forestry division's responsibilities is to manage the company stables. And Warner rides whenever he has the opportunity, or can create it, and Murphy has always been attracted to horses, ever since childhood when he hung around a livery stable, currying horses in trade for the chance occasionally to ride.

Inevitably, Dennis and Warner met at the stables, and before too long Warner let Dennis ride one of the sorrier horses, just to work it out. In no time, it became clear to Warner that he had in his forestry man a diamond in the rough.

Warner took Dennis under his wing, and the rest, as they say, is history.

One day Dennis met a horse named Roguish Eye that Warner had bought for a measly $4,000 — a nominal sum as horses go because, as Warner recalls, Roguish Eye "had a reputation for being this regular renegade outlaw!" The horse was so skittish that he'd been raised on tranquilizers. But Dennis quickly discerned nearly limitless potential in the horse, and began working with him gently, ever so gently. And soon enough, he had the horse doing so right that he renamed him.

Ole Dennis, "all turned out in the proper fashion," on Tuscaloosa, with Jack W. Warner, '41, Tuscaloosa's owner and trainer for Dennis. Photo was made last summer after first-place victory in international competition in Hickstead, England.

And Dennis and Do Right have been doing just that, as the headline writers like to put it, ever since. For them merely to enter a competition is to serve notice on the rest of the horse world that second place is the best to which other stables can aspire.

It was that way at last winter's National Horse Show in Madison Square Garden, for example, horsedom's World Series. In the Puissance, the premiere event in that premiere competition, against the toughest international challengers, the unlikely combination from Gulf States Paper cleared the wall at a phenomenal seven feet, one inch—four inches better than the next best team.

It's like that everywhere they go. Murphy is a member of the U.S. Equestrian Team now — building up to the 1976 Olympics — under Coach Bertalan de Nemethy. With Do Right and another standout in the Warner Stables, Tuscaloosa, Murphy toured Europe last summer as a member of the Prize of Nations team. On Tuscaloosa, Murphy won two international first-place prizes, and on Do Right another; Murphy was one of three American riders who took the King George V Gold Cup; on one or the other of "his" horses he placed highly in seven other competitions. In November, Murphy won the "leading-rider" trophy in Toronto's Royal Winter Fair — the first time, according to U.S. Team Coach de Nemethy, a rookie has taken that honor. Things have reached the point that it's really not possible any longer to read about equestrian competition without reading that Dennis and Do Right and Tuscaloosa have cleaned up again.

"Now," in fact, ole Jack Warner told Sports Illustrated after the National Horse Show, "it's gotten to where I'm training for Dennis."

Above left: Do Right carries Dennis over the seven-foot one-inch wall in Madison Square Garden to win the Puissance at last winter's National Horse Show. (Murphy had already won second- and third-place ribbons when he made this spectacular jump. Afterwards, he reported with some wonderment, "The people were just screaming—just going wild.")

Above right: Ole Jack jumping with Alabama, another mount that he is training for Dennis. Warner says this is the horse to watch because he'll be famous some day.

A half-and-half basketball season; 5 swimmers are All American

If ever an athletic team experienced a season divided into two distinct halves, one good and one bad, it was the 1974-75 W&L basketball squad. Unfortunately for the Generals, the good part came first.

Behind a nationally-ranked defense, Coach Verne Canfield's team was practically invincible through its first 14 games, winning 12 of them. But the lack of an offense caught up with them during the last half, and they hit the victory column just three more times.

Still, there were a lot of pluses for the 1974-75 Generals. They posted their ninth straight winning season with an overall 15-12 mark. In those nine years, W&L has won 149 games and lost 76, for an average record of 17-8.

And W&L acquitted itself well in its tough schedule. The Generals beat Navy, which is becoming a habit, and gave highly favored Virginia a real scare before losing by just eight points at Charlottesville. Nationally fourth-ranked Randolph-Macon also just barely squeaked by, 67-62, after W&L played perhaps its finest game of the year and nearly pulled off a major upset. (Macon went on to post a 27-3 record, two of the losses to national champion Old Dominion).

Besides Division I opponents Virginia and Navy, W&L played some of the best Division II teams in the country, including national champion Old Dominion, Randolph-Macon, Roanoke, Baltimore University and Madison). Although W&L did not bump off any of these powers, the fact they were willing to take them on helped W&L achieve a post-season invitation to the NCAA championship tournament for Division III.

"We went on the strength of schedule," commented NCAA Tournament Selection Committee member Jim Reedy. "Beating Navy and playing well against those other teams impressed the committee."

W&L not only received the bid to play for the national title—the Generals' first venture ever into post-season championship play—they also were selected to host the South Atlantic Regional Tournament. Traveling to Doremus Gym for the tourney were two New Jersey schools, Glassboro State and William Paterson, and North Carolina Methodist, the No. 1 seeded team with a 20-4 record.

Glassboro State defeated W&L in the first round, won the regional title the next night, and then won two more games to advance to the national championship game, where they lost by a close margin to LeMoyne-Owen.

The regional tournament marked the close of the college careers of three W&L seniors: co-captains Greg Croghan and Guy Kerr, and Bowman Williams. Croghan was the team's leading scorer, with an average of 12.0 points a game, and one of the top rebounders. Williams and Kerr were regulars who ranked fourth and fifth in scoring with 7.5 and 7.3 averages, respectively. Kerr led the team in steals with 79.

Coach Canfield expressed pleasure with the strong play at the end of the season of 6-8 center Norm Kristoff, who averaged 11.0 points and 8.7 rebounds a game. A junior, Kristoff will return next year, along with third-leading scorer John Podgajny (10.9 average) and regulars Don Berlin, Jeff Baum, Kim Sims, Gary Fitzgerald and Paul Maloney.

Injuries played a key role in limiting the Generals' efforts. "We played most of the season missing two starters," noted Canfield. The 6-5 Gary Fitzgerald broke his arm in the second game of the season and backcourt quarterback Paul Maloney totaled his knee in an early game.

W&L's superswimmers: All Americans Trip Wornom, Tad Van Leer, Bill Tiers, John Hudson, and Will Brotherton.

5 ALL-AMERICAN SWIMMERS

Washington and Lee's swimming team had a very successful season this winter and did very well in post-season championship participation.

Coach Bill Stearns' swimmers posted a 9-3 record in dual meet competition (including victories over William and Mary and VMI) and had five team members achieve All-American status at the national meet, the most ever in one season. They are John Hudson, Tad Van Leer, team captain Will Brotherton, Bill Tiers, and Trip Wornom.

The swimming Generals were led all season by freshman sensation John Hudson, who broke records nearly every time he jumped into the pool. At one point, Hudson, a distance freestyler, was ranked No. 1 in the country in two individual events and second in still another.

By the end of the regular season, Hudson had broken four state records and smashed five school marks. He capped off the performance by setting three records in the Virginia State Meet held in the new W&L pool. He was a unanimous choice as the meet's Outstanding Swimmer.

Then, at the national meet, Hudson made All-American five times. He bettered the national record in two events, but ironically finished second in both: the 500-yard and 1,650-yard freestyles. In the 200-yard freestyle, he finished fifth. All three of Hudson's times were new state records: 1:45.037 in the 200, 4:42.063 in the 500, and 16:16.063 in the 1,650.

Besides making All-American in those three events, Hudson also swam a leg on W&L's two All-American relay teams, the 800- and 400-yard relays.

The 800 (Hudson, Van Leer, Brotherton and Tiers) set a new state and school record of 7:15.990, while the 400 (Hudson, Van Leer, Brotherton and Wornom) posted a new school record of 3:16.156.

Almost overshadowed by Hudson's feats were those of sophomore Tad Van Leer, who made All-American three times. Besides swimming on the two All-American relay teams, Van Leer set a new school record in the 100-yard freestyle with a clocking of :48.485.

With such outstanding performances, W&L finished 10th among 74 schools represented at the NCAA national meet. For W&L and head swimming coach Bill Stearns the five All-Americans represented the most ever in any given year. Previously, Billy Ball won the honor in 1969 and Bill Brumback in 1971.

WRESTLERS ARE WINNERS

The W&L wrestling team posted a winning 9-8 season and sent four wrestlers to the NCAA national meet. Team captain Doug Ford, a 177-pounder, capped off an outstanding college career by just narrowly missing All-American status at the national meet. (To qualify, a wrestler has to place among the top six in his weight class at the national meet).

Ford pinned his first opponents and lost his second match, but that opponent went on to the semifinals, giving Ford another chance in the "wrestle-backs." Here, he defeated the third seeded entry in the tournament and won a third match before losing—in overtime—in a match that would have put him in the select top six had he won.

Also participating in the national meet were 118-pound Howard Knipp, 150-pound Jimmy Crytzer and heavy-weight Steve Schweizerhof.

W&L finished a very close second (to Madison) in the state small college meet, and had three state champions in Ford, Crytzer and Knipp.

ROBERT W. KIME, senior vice president and trust officer of Mountain Trust Bank of Roanoke, Va., died Jan. 20, 1975 in a Roanoke hospital. Kime began his career with Mountain Trust in 1954 after having worked for Marshall National Bank and Trust Co. in Fauquier County and Flat Top National Bank in Bluefield. He was named vice president of Mountain Trust in 1964. He served Washington and Lee University in many capacities and was, for several years, a member of the Alumni Fund Council. Kime was a member of the Virginia State and Roanoke Bar Associations.

Inspiring examples of deferred giving

● Kenneth Stevens came to Washington and Lee in 1946 to teach biology. For much of the remainder of his life he devoted his time, his skills and his energy to preparing students at this University for careers in science, especially in medicine.

Teaching science to undergraduates in a relatively small liberal arts college can often be a difficult and frustrating task, but because of the dedication of Kenneth Stevens and men like him, the sciences have remained strong at Washington and Lee, and Washington and Lee graduates continue to play significant roles in science and medicine throughout the nation.

Kenneth Stevens' contribution to this University did not stop when his teaching career ended. At his death, in 1973, he bequeathed to Washington and Lee his library and his house in Lexington. The proceeds from the sale of the house, received during the past year, have established a scholarship fund for a student from Dr. Stevens' native Connecticut.

● Russell B. Reynolds Jr., was crippled, so disabled by illness that the hills of Lexington and the steps of campus buildings rendered him virtually helpless and dependent on the aid of a companion. In his years as a student here, 1941 through 1946, he overcame obstacles that others do not know exist and mastered the Washington and Lee education he had sought.

When, years later, Reynolds died, his father created a scholarship fund in his memory, designed to assist other students similarly afflicted to obtain an education which his son had prized so highly and which their physical condition might deny them. This year Washington and Lee received a final distribution to this scholarship fund under the will of Russell Reynolds Sr., now himself deceased.

● Edward Hix received a B.S. degree from Washington and Lee in 1917. The career for which Washington and Lee had prepared him took Edward Hix far from Lexington; at his death he lived in Portland, Ore. But he remembered his alma mater and her need for unrestricted funds, and by his will bequeathed $1,000 to Washington and Lee if his wife should not survive him. Marjorie Hix did in fact survive her husband but, in 1973, when she died, her will contained the same bequest to this University.

To attract, hold and fairly compensate the faculty that make this University great, to provide the facilities, books and equipment that enable such teachers and their students to pursue greater knowledge effectively together, to permit all students who wish to share this pursuit to do so regardless of their financial condition—in short, to maintain the kind of University that inspired the love of Kenneth Stevens, Russel Reynolds and his father, and Edward and Marjorie Hix, is ever more costly.

During the last fiscal year, payments were received by Washington and Lee from 10 estates, totalling more than $1,700,000. Among the University's needs which some of these distributions will help meet are scholarship and loan funds from the estates of Katherine Colvin, both the widow and the mother of a professor here, and Walter McDonald, a former trustee; a law library from the estate of Wilbur C. Hall, distinguished Virginia attorney; and an endowed chair, now occupied by former Dean and Acting President William W. Pusey III, from the estate of S. Blount Mason.

In addition to the gifts which were received from estates the University was informed of insurance provisions made for its benefit, the creation of trusts in which it will share, and gifts made through the Washington and Lee Pooled Income Fund, all of which will ultimately help it to face the challenges of the future.

Building and planning for the future require confidence and hope. Both are provided by those friends and alumni who decide to play a part in the future by including Washington and Lee in their estate plans. As the generosity of George Washington nearly 200 years ago has helped to create the University of 1975, the University that will be loved by future generations will bear the imprint of those who are remembering it now.

Estate Planning Class Agents

A new group of alumni volunteers has begun work in cooperation with the Office of University Development's effort to secure new capital resources for Washington and Lee. Martin P. Burks, '32L, chairman of the University's Estate Planning Council, has announced that Class Agents for bequests and deferred gifts have been chosen for most classes, law and academic, that graduated before 1951.

The Class Agents will undertake to familiarize their classmates with the areas in which Washington and Lee needs new capital and with the many ways in which these needs may be met through estate planning. They will make available information about wills, trusts, life insurance, and other forms of deferred giving.

The work of the Class Agents will supplement the efforts of the members of the Estate Planning Council, a group of alumni formed in 1971 and headed since its formation by Burks. The Council, organized on a regional basis, will continue to advise the Development Office staff in the administration of the deferred giving program and will help the staff and the class agents in giving planning assistance to supporters throughout the country.

Since the formation of the Council, Washington and Lee has received over $2.3 million in distributions from estates. In addition about $500,000 in new charitable remainder trusts have been established for the University's benefit and Washington and Lee has created a Pooled Income Fund which now manages and invests approximately $900,000 of principal which ultimately will come to W&L.

LEWIS HALL
