During Three-Day Visit

Dialogue Fosters
A Better Understanding

This time it was different.
The Alumni Board of Directors came to the Washington and Lee campus in November for an extraordinary meeting. Of course, the directors took care of the routine. They approved the minutes, they heard a report on the annual alumni giving program, they were told that the chair fund was doing well, they called for continued alumni support of Washington and Lee.

But that was a small part of it.

For three days—November 3-5—the Directors took an intensive look at Washington and Lee—its people, its facilities, its programs, its problems, its plans, its purposes, its aspirations, its very being.

And when President Fred C.
Cole and Frank Parsons, assistant to the president for institutional research, joined the board for a summary meeting on the third day, the board said, in effect, “This has been good; we should do it again; and other groups should do the same.”

It was decided then and there that Executive Secretary William C. Washburn should work with University officials to arrange similar programs to which other alumni—perhaps chapter presidents or class agents—would be invited, either in the Spring or next Fall.

More than that. The directors adopted a statement for distribution to all alumni. A key paragraph noted “a spirit of alertness and openmindedness” at Washington and Lee, “a willingness to question and experiment, and a vigorous dedication to standards of excellence. The University appears to be alive and on the move.”

(The full text of the statement accompanies this article.)

The meeting was arranged to give the Alumni Board an in-depth understanding of the University today. A specific aim was to foster more effective alumni interest, participation, and sharing in the progress of the University. This aim was largely accomplished in a questioning atmosphere. It was a meaningful dialogue between the men responsible for running the University in a time of great educational ferment and the men representative of what the University has accomplished and of those who must sustain her.

All of the twelve members of the Alumni Board were present except Thomas C. Frost, Jr., of San Antonio, Texas, who was out of the country on business. The presence of so many directors was in itself special and gave weight to the board’s responses and recommendations.

Francis W. Plowman, Alumni Board president, presided at the formal board sessions.

At the business meeting, the board favored the coordination of all University fund raising activities, including the annual alumni giving program, by a new office of University Development.

This action amended the board’s position adopted at the May meeting. At that time the board favored adding an experienced assistant to the alumni office staff to conduct the annual giving program.

The board’s new position was based on President Cole’s review of the University’s plans for creating and staffing a permanent Office of University Development.

President Cole reported that the matter had been studied as part of the University’s recent Self-Study and that advice had been obtained from an outside consulting firm. He said the generally accepted and most effective organization for fund raising in colleges and universities is to have all such activities, including alumni giving, coordinated by one central office.

President Cole reviewed plans to name a director of development who would be assisted by an associate director whose primary responsibility would be direction of the annual Alumni Fund, in cooperation with Alumni Secretary Washburn and the Alumni Fund Council.

The board recommended that the University Board of Trustees appraise the several federal loan and grant programs that may be available to help improve or expand the University’s buildings and facilities.

This action followed Dr. Cole’s discussion with the directors of the physical needs of the University and the question of federal aid programs relating to these and other needs.

The Alumni Board endorsed the President’s comments on the need for physical improvements and expansion and suggested that an appraisal of possible federal aid be made at the earliest practical time. This work is now in progress.

The board also recommended that the University Board of Trus-
A STATEMENT
by
The Alumni Board of Directors

THE ALUMNI BOARD OF DIRECTORS participated in a three-day program on the campus designed to acquaint it with the University today. The members of the Board met with Dr. Cole, members of the faculty, the staff, and the student body.

They discussed policies and practices, educational and athletic programs, student attitudes and student life, and the status of traditions. They toured the campus, saw the buildings and facilities, were exposed to the details of the Self-Study program, and discussed with Dr. Cole and the faculty and staff the implementation of this program, the setting of goals, and the current status of the University's long-range planning.

In the course of this intense three-day experience, the Board noted with approbation a spirit of alertness and open-mindedness among those it met, a willingness to question and experiment, and a vigorous dedication to standards of excellence. The University appears to be alive and on the move.

The students are not content with complacency and the status quo, but are sensitive, keen, often dissatisfied and searching. They are maintaining the essential traditions, not routinely but thoughtfully and purposefully, so that their self-imposed rules are modern and as alive as in the past.

The faculty and staff indicate a deep loyalty to the school and its mission. There is clearly a vigorous and sensitive dedication to the student and to assuring him a superior college education. These men are raising the University's standards of excellence, and they are looking to the future. There is an air of teamwork and quiet confidence among them.

The Board found its three days experience on the campus stimulating. In its opinion, Dr. Cole, the faculty, staff, and the student body deserve the enthusiastic support of the University alumni. They continue the work of maintaining and building this great institution.

tees institute a policy of granting sabbatical leaves to qualified members of the University faculty.

This resolution contained the declaration that the Alumni Board had had the opportunity to meet many members of the Washington and Lee faculty and had been "uniformly impressed with its ability, character and dedication." It suggested sabbatical leaves "in the interest of retaining a faculty of this caliber." The question of sabbatical leaves also received much attention in the University's Self-Study.

In other action, the board learned that the Alumni House Fund had reached more than $775,000 as of September 15; (The Fund subsequently exceeded $81,000); approved a draft copy of a statement of policy on the use of the Alumni House and a report on the chair fund.

The three-day program began with a Thursday session at which Dr. Cole, Mr. Parsons and University Treasurer James W. Whitehead presented an authoritative summation of the University's status today, its prospects for the short and long-range future, the effect of the Self-Study on the administration, including the Trustees, and a discussion of the Statement of Institutional Philosophy contained in the Self-Study Report.

The directors then toured the campus for a first-hand look at facilities, with special emphasis on problem areas or areas of special need—including a new gymnasium and student union.

There was a special report by the Deans of the University. There was a special program on faculty matters that covered the problems of maintaining a strong teaching faculty in competition with other colleges, business, government and the problems of faculty mobility, turnover, and replacement. Covered too, were the University's strengths and weaknesses in this competition.

The University's athletic program received a thorough going over. This session provided the directors with an up-to-date evaluation of the University's non-subsidized athletic program, including an evaluation of the problems of scheduling and recruiting and the economics of such a program. The need for a new facility to replace 53-year-old Doremus Gymnasium was emphasized.

A highlight of the program was the Alumni Board's luncheon with the Student Body Executive Committee and the editors of the Ring-tum Phi. This session gave the directors a chance to hear Student Body President William Jeffress report on the status of students traditions and the Honor System. Also the directors, during the time they were on the Washington and Lee campus, talked with many other students.

Their impression of the caliber of students now attending Washington and Lee was summed up in their formal statement: "The students are not content with complacency and the status quo, but are sensitive, keen, often dissatisfied and searching. They are maintaining the essential traditions, not routinely, but thoughtfully and purposefully, so that their self-imposed rules are modern and as alive as in the past."

Another session covered a status report on admissions matters and financial aid, including a provision of insight as to the purpose and function of the Admissions Committee.

Mostly the program was hard work of the kind that goes along with an exchange of ideas and discussions of matters affecting the welfare of a great institution of learning.

But it was not all work. There were social hours, luncheons and dinners that included the directors' wives. President and Mrs. Cole were hosts at a reception at their home before one of two dinners attended by academic department heads, deans, and other administrative staff members and their wives.

And on the final morning, Saturday, November 5, the directors attended the formal dedication of the Alumni House. Speakers included President Cole, Mr. Plowman and H. Graham Morison, '30, of Washington, D.C., chairman of the Alumni House Campaign.

And it was Homecoming. Saturday afternoon the directors had the pleasure of watching the Washington and Lee Generals beat Sewanee 13-10—a fitting finale to three days of friendly fact-finding.
One of the nation's leading businessmen, three distinguished alumni, including the Governor of Delaware, and 18 students were tapped for membership in Omicron Delta Kappa's Alpha Circle at Washington and Lee at the annual "tap day" assembly on February 22.

Harrison F. Dunning, president and chief executive officer of the Scott Paper Co. of Philadelphia, was honored and was also the principal speaker.

He urged more young people to enter the business world and to provide the leadership it needs to keep the free enterprise system strong in the years ahead.

The alumni tapped were Charles L. Terry, Jr., '23L, Governor of Delaware; Joseph M. Glickstein, '20L, an attorney in Jacksonville, Fla.; and Edwin A. Morris, '26, chairman of the board of Blue Bell, Inc., of Greensboro, N.C.

Dunning, in his address, said that too many college graduates are turning away from a business career because of "ill-founded conceptions that business is overly concerned with materialistic values" and that it fails to provide feelings of satisfaction and accomplishment.

He said that after being in business for 36 years he could dispel such misconceptions. He said that today's competitive business enterprise gives each member wide latitude for imaginative and rewarding action.

He stressed a need for talented young people in accounting, finance, marketing and management. He said these fields will demand "exceptional people" in the years ahead of growing complexity in business.

The student initiates were tapped for their qualities of leadership on the campus.

Law students tapped were F. William Burke, Washington, D.C.; William M. Schildt, Hagerstown, Md.; Peter W. Martone, Norfolk, Va.; Joseph D. Logan, III, Roanoke, Va., and James C. Treadway, Jr., Union, S.C.

Undergraduate juniors honored were Richard H. Nash, Jr., Louisville, Ky.; Lane B. Steinger, Creve Coeur, Mo.; Lucien B. Crosland, Short Hills, N.J.; Robert J. Stack, Silver Spring, Md.; and David T. Johnson, Jr., Pensacola, Fla.

The Packers Are Different

By Chuck Lane, '63

The Green Bay Packers, in addition to being the defending World Champions, are a rather unique football organization and because of this fact, my job is perhaps unlike any other in professional sports.

For one, the Packers are a community owned team (1,700 share holders in a non-profit corporation) coached and managed by one man. Vince Lombardi is the sole authority in all matters, both on and off the field.

At home, in both Green Bay and Milwaukee (we play 4 regular season games per year in Green Bay; 3 in Milwaukee) all tickets are sold on a season basis. All games are sold out in advance and there are over 8,000 names on the waiting list, but their chances of securing tickets are minimal.

Tickets can be passed from generation to generation and there is generally no turn over of seats.

On the road, the Packers are the number one drawing attraction in the National Football League, playing to capacity in all but two stadiums in the 1966 season.

Due both to the team's success on the field and the community pride in the club, there is obviously little need to promote the team and my duties as Publicity and Public Relations Director are oriented more towards supplying the news media with information and services.

In the past three years, I have been associated with promotion of Harlem Globetrotter basketball and while they are world famous and a good show, they are not a commodity that appeals to the seasoned sports enthusiast year after year. There is very little new that you can say about them and the outcome of the action is never in doubt.

Consequently my duties with the Trotters was one of promotion rather than public relations.

On the other hand, the Packers are an entirely different story. The public and those who cover pro football cannot get enough material on the Packers. They have been the standard of football excellence since Vince Lombardi took over in 1959, and everybody enjoys hearing about a winner.

And with the uniform quality of every team in the League, the old bromide "on any given Sunday, any team is capable of beating any other team" certainly holds true. Everyone points for their game with the Packers and, unfortunately for us, seems to play their best against Green Bay.

My primary duty is to provide the media with up-to-date information and statistics on the players and team and also have available films and video tapes to illustrate various points during interviews.

Also as Publicity Director, you are often called upon to furnish ideas and arguments to support these ideas for feature stories and on some occasions correct impressions that newsmen have developed about an individual or the team. Of course it is impossible to monitor everything that is being said about the team, but often, by presenting strong enough arguments supported by statistics, you can alter the course of publicity.

As Publicity Director, I have a responsibility to supply the news men who cover pro football with information, but I feel also that my primary responsibility is to the Packers. Often it calls for maintaining an uneasy truce between the two, but by and large our writers honor our request that certain matters be left private.

This season, the Packers are confronted with a "problem" that 14 other NFL coaches would prefer to have: being the defending World Champions. Everyone has picked

About the Author

Charles (Chuck) Lane, '63, was one of Washington and Lee's better football players of the last decade. During his three varsity years as a quarterback the Generals won 35 games, tied once and lost one. General fans will not forget that Thanksgiving Day game against Washington University in St. Louis in 1961. The Generals were trailing 6-20 in the closing minutes of the half. Lane called a pass play, and everybody knew it was going to be a pass play. Lane faded, faked, threw. He connected for an 80-yard touchdown. The play turned the tide, and the Generals won in the end 33-20. It preserved the Generals' undefeated season that year.

Now Lane is Publicity Director for another big winner—the Green Bay Packers—the professional football team for which his Washington and Lee coach, Lee McLaughlin, once played.

Lane tells in this article about his work and why he likes it. It was written last fall before the Packers polished off the Kansas City Chiefs in the Super Bowl.

In a note to the editors, Lane said about the article: "I can hardly wait until all the W&L Alumni see it and think 'Aha, here is my long awaited source of free Packer tickets!' But it is a fleeting hope. The Packers' waiting list for tickets, as Lane points out, exceeds 8,000.

the Packers to repeat again this year and has given our three number one draft choices a great deal of publicity. Consequently they have created the potential problem of complacency and jealousy.

Everyone knows that football games are settled on the field, not through speculation, and if a team lets itself believe that they are invincible they are likely to be shocked back to reality the following Sunday. Here the coach must maintain the proper squad attitude and it is my job to keep any publicity that might adversely affect squad morale at a minimum.

Secondly, in Donny Anderson, Jim Grabowski, and Gale Gillingham the Packers were most fortunate in securing three of the nation's top college football players via the draft. However, the team wasn't the only fortunate one. Circumstances dictated a financial war with the then-rival AFL for the services of these players and in the bidding that ensued, three untested rookies acquired some rather handsome bonuses for signing with Green Bay. The result on the veterans' morale is obvious, but Coach Lombardi has managed to keep the discontent at an absolute minimum.

The press plays up the "million dollar" angle and frequently bases their appraisal on the dollar, so as Publicity Director I try to see that the proven veterans get the deserved amount of publicity and recognition.

Our publicity is designed to draw attention to the entire team rather than individuals, because the game is one of teamwork rather than individual stars.

When the Packers play away from home, I arrive early on Tuesday, providing the local press, radio and TV with information on our team. I stay in town until the team arrives, handle the arrangements for the press covering the Packers, and then return to Green Bay with the team.

For home games, I am responsible for the operation of the press box and the needs of the visiting team and press. This includes writers from other cities, national magazine correspondents, and CBS-TV.

During the off-season (roughly from Feb. 1 to July 15) we are involved in writing stories and releases that you see featured in football forecasts, press information guides for the upcoming season, and the handling of player endorsements and public appearances. In short, the off-season is that in name only.

Next year, I will also become involved in the design, layout, and publishing of the game program in addition to the other duties.

Since games are played on Sundays for the most part, our schedule calls for a seven day work week, but it is really fascinating. The people encountered are most interesting and when you enjoy the game of football as I do, it really doesn't seem like work. Other than the obvious disadvantages of long term suitcase dwelling, it is ideal.

Future plans are uncertain at present, but they will surely be for a continuation of my career in pro football. The game has enjoyed a tremendous growth the last five to ten years and all indications point to continued popularity. With television's increasing role and the rapid expansion of the League, there is unlimited opportunity, but for the present, I feel extremely fortunate to be associated with this fine Green Bay Packer organization.

A Record Enrollment

Washington and Lee enrolled 1,386 students for the 1966-67 school year—the largest number in its 217-year history. The total exceeded by 49 the previous high last year. There are 304 freshmen, 1,182 undergraduates, and 204 law students. The students represent 43 states, the District of Columbia and eight foreign countries. Virginia has the most representatives with 303.

Cohen is Valedictorian

Alan Gary Cohen of Pulaski, Tenn., is valedictorian of the 1967 graduating class. He is a pre-medicine major and was selected by the faculty at its March meeting as the senior degree candidate with the highest cumulative academic average at the end of the first semester of the current session. He had a grade point average of 2.809 on a scale under which 3.0 would be a straight "A" performance. Cohen is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Cohen of Pulaski.

A To Equal 4

"3.0" is out; "4.0" is in—beginning with the 1967-68 academic year. Washington and Lee has adopted a new grading system. A "4.0" system will replace the old "3.0" system. Students will continue to receive letter grades, A through F. But grade point ratios assigned to the letters will be 4 for an A, 3 for a B, etc., instead of the present 3 for an A, 2 for a B, etc. Registrar Harold S. Head recommended the change, and it was approved by the faculty. It is a simpler way of recording grades, and it has become standard in a majority of colleges and universities.

Unrestricted Gifts

Washington and Lee University in late 1966 received several unrestricted grants. The American Oil Foundation gave $5,000, which President Fred C. Cole said would be used to increase the resources of McCormick Library and its branches on campus. He said the gift would help the University further its quality of service. The Esso Education Foundation gave $2,500, which President Cole said "is an expression of confidence in our program of quality education." The Sears-Roebuck Foundation gave $1,500, which President Cole said "will sustain us in our effort to perform ever more useful service to the young men who study on our campus."

A Gift of Books

McCormick Library recently received the gift of 4,800 books from the estate of Carter Newman Bealer of Washington, D.C., who was graduated from Washington and Lee in 1922. Mr. Bealer’s wide range of interests is reflected in the collection. The collection includes many biographies of theatrical personalities, histories of the British and American theater and of contemporary plays. Included, too, are volumes on world literature and poetry and art—particularly American painting—and “how-to-draw” books. There are books on American culture, architecture, wildlife and pottery. Mr. Bealer had a keen interest in cats and collected several hundred books on them, many of them children’s stories about cats. Included in the collection are several cat “autobiographies.” Librarian Henry C. Coleman, Jr. called the collection a welcome addition. He said many of the volumes would fill in works missing from other collections and many would replace worn out or misplaced books in the library.

PHILLIPS RECEIVES POST

Dr. Charles F. Phillips, Jr., professor of economics, has been appointed Southeastern Regional Director of Omicron Delta Epsilon, the national honorary society in economics. He will coordinate the growth and development of chapters in the region including Virginia, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Tennessee and Puerto Rico. There are now 17 chapters in the region.

ILLUSTRATIONS PUBLISHED

Five illustrations by Ray Prohaska, Washington and Lee’s artist-in-residence, appeared in the February issue of Ford Times. Three of the illustrations were in color and accompanied an article on sailfish. The article described the sport of sailfishing in the Gulf Stream waters. Prohaska has illustrated many articles in national magazines and books.

LEE WINS A CONVERT

Bad things about Robert E. Lee . . .?

Washington and Lee University officials scratched their heads as they pondered this question from Renee Dygutowicz, a 10-year-old Ohio school girl.

Renee was on U. S. Grant’s side in a classroom debate. She wrote the University requesting “any bad things or habits” Lee had.

“I am trying to prove that General Grant was better than Lee,” she wrote. “My team is counting on me. We are getting graded for this, and I would like to get a good grade.”

Lee scholars at the University came up with an incident early in the Civil War when Lee, ever the gentleman, failed to take stern measures against one of his subordinate generals whose negligence allowed a Union force to escape a trap.

Douglas Southall Freeman told about it in his four-volume biography of Lee: “Of Lee it became necessary to ask . . . whether his judgment as a soldier or his consideration as a gentleman dominated his acts.”

Renee informed the University later that the debate was a tie and added plaintively: “I wish I had been on Lee’s side.”

Lee, we think, would have given her a good grade.

STUDENT AID INCREASES

Washington and Lee students are receiving about $345,000 in scholarship and other financial aid this academic year. Farris P. Hotchkiss, Director of Financial Aid, reported that 317 of 1,386 students are receiving financial help from several sources, including two new federally sponsored programs –College Work-Study and the Educational Opportunity Grant program. The total aid figure is about $40,000 higher than last year. Hotchkiss said the University’s aid goal is “to make a Washington and Lee education available to every man who has gained admission, regardless of his financial situation.”

A NEW NOVEL BY DAVIS

Paxton Davis, professor of journalism, will have a new novel published in September—his fourth book. His latest novel is entitled The Seasons of Heroes and will be published by William Morrow & Co. Prof. Davis describes the book as a short work of between 75,000 and 80,000 words. It is the story of three generations of a family living in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. His previous works include Two Soldiers (1956), which contained two short war novels; The Battle of New Market (1963), a fictional work for juveniles now in its second printing, and One of the Dark Places (1965), a story concerned with a typhus epidemic in Burma and scheduled for release in paperback form soon.

FOUNDERS’ DAY THOUGHTS

On January 19, 1967—the 160th anniversary of the birth of Robert E. Lee—President Fred C. Cole rose in Doremus Gymnasium and addressed the assembled students and faculty of Washington and Lee University. It was the traditional Lee’s Campus Gazette...

Birthdays-Founders' Day convocation, and President Cole said in part:

"...Lee remains a hero in the eyes of millions. He remains a hero of the history of this University. We honor his memory today, not only for what he accomplished when he was this institution's president, but also for what he hoped to accomplish. His aspiration that this school become a great institution is one that we continue to pursue today and will pursue diligently in the future. We honor Lee for his contribution—and for his inspiration.

"...The professor is the great resource that a college has to offer. Students can get information from a book or journal, read it at home or in a library. They can acquire laboratory skills and learn techniques on the job. Almost anything they derive in the way of extra-curricular benefits can be afforded by a variety of private or community clubs and activities. Only in college, however, can be found the guidance, the association, and the inspiration of the wise and sympathetic teacher. The teacher in a great college or university must be an able communicator of knowledge, an enthusiastic scholar, and a patient counselor.

"We have always had such teachers here on this campus. As students in daily contact with our professors you can attest to this at present more effectively than anyone.

"But there are others outside the University who are aware of the excellence of our faculty. They recognize the distinctive services that are being rendered here in undergraduate education."

"...Last Fall the University invited the Board of Directors of the...Alumni Association to attend a special three-day conference here on the campus...The Directors agree that the quality of our stu-

WLUR-FM on the Air

Washington and Lee's new radio station, WLUR-FM, began its regular schedule of broadcasts on Monday evening, February 27, 1967. The special inaugural program included statements by Governor Mills Godwin, U. S. Senator Harry F. Byrd, Jr., Lexington Mayor D. E. (Pat) Brady, and University President Fred C. Cole. The new 10-watt station is non-commercial and educational. It broadcasts from 7-11 p.m. Monday through Friday at 91.5 megacycles on the FM dial. The new station's signal is received strongly throughout Lexington and Rockbridge County, but one man reported picking up the station in South Dakota. The transmitter, studios and other broadcasting equipment are on the third floor of Reid Hall. The 36-foot antenna is on the roof. The programming includes news, music, public affairs, announcements, general interest programs and experimental programs. Charles E. Winston, instructor in journalism, is station manager. The operation is an integral part of the program of the Department of Journalism and Communications.
A NEW BOOKSTORE

It is new, and it is popular. The University's Book and Supply Store opened at the beginning of classes this year. Business has been booming all year. The new store is located in a building between the Freshman Dormitory and McCormick Library. The renovation cost $100,000. The textbook sales area is housed in the basement. A snack bar and supply store are on the first floor of the main building. A paperback bookstore is housed in a new one-story wing. This is a new service, and students and faculty members are taking full advantage of the wide range of books and supplies available. The bookstore and snack bar were previously located in the rear of the Student Union Building. The traffic and browsing and buying are much heavier at the new location.

SPEAKERS AND MORE SPEAKERS

Pick a subject—almost any subject—and if you had been at Washington and Lee in recent months, you would probably have heard someone notable in the field talk about it. Recent visiting speakers included:

Tom C. Clark, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court; Fred M. Vinson, Jr., Assistant Attorney General in charge of the United States Justice Department's Criminal Division; Dr. Robert W. Johannsen, chairman of the history department at the University of Illinois; Dr. Edgar P. CONTACT Symposium

"The quality of the speakers we attracted this year surpassed our own expectations," said Stafford Keeg in of Princeton, N. J., a second-year law student and chairman of this year's CONTACT Symposium. He contended the four-day series of speeches, seminars, and public appearances by the participants was the best CONTACT program in its three-year history. It is sponsored by the Interfraternity Council.

The theme was "The Crumbling Establishment." The speakers were James Farmer, former national director of the Congress on Racial Equality; Richmond Flowers, former attorney general of Alabama and an unsuccessful candidate for governor against Mrs. George C. Wallace; Tom Wolfe, an author noted for his "POP-art" style of writing and a 1952 graduate of Washington and Lee; and Frederick Wilhelmsen, author of several conservative books. Saul D. Alinsky, a self-avowed "professional radical," had to cancel his appearance because of snowy weather.

The program also included the showing of a pair of "underground movies" and a concert by Phil Ochs, a protest singer.

Fancy Dress 1967

Fancy Dress 1967 was all of that.

The theme was "Opening Night." The men wore tails or dinner jackets and the women long gowns. It was like the premiere of a new Broadway play or the opening of the Met.

Peter Duchin and his Orchestra played from an 18 by 24-foot stage—some oldies, some swing, and some rock-'n-roll. Rich blue curtains and white draperies formed the backdrop, and during intermissions the curtains were drawn and old silent movies were shown. Evans Dining Hall was seldom gayer the evening of Friday, January 27.

A 35-couple figure opened the ball at 8 p.m. and the dancing continued until 1 a.m. Members of the figure included Fancy Dress President Ed Allen of New York City, the ball vice-presidents, representatives of the 18 social fraternities, the Independent Union, and their dates. The next day the Serendipity Singers performed in Doremus Gymnasium.

When it was all over, there was general agreement that Fancy Dress at Washington and Lee is still "the outstanding collegiate social event in the South."

It was a long receiving line as everyone shook hands with the faculty and staff.
EARL STANSBURY MATTINGLY did not like for Washington and Lee people to use thumb tacks on the doors of University buildings. It marred the paint, he said. He liked to keep things straight—the accounts, the records, the grounds, the names of students—everything having to do with Washington and Lee.

Some students, faculty members and administrative associates may have joked occasionally about the finicky "Mr. Matt." But no one scoffed at his devotion to the University. He was universally admired for his efficiency. He had the affection of his colleagues and was popular throughout the University community.

When Mattingly retired in July, 1966, the Board of Trustees, in a resolution, expressed "its deep sense of appreciation for Mr. Mattingly's distinguished record of service and its gratification that his experience, wisdom and friendship will continue to benefit the University, the president, and the members of the board in the years ahead."

Mattingly was made treasurer and secretary, emeritus. He was closing out nearly 50 years of service to the University. He began in 1916 as a student assistant in the treasurer's office. He served in World War I. He returned to Washington and Lee in 1919 and became manager of the dining hall. The next year he was appointed registrar while still working toward his A.B. degree. He earned it in 1925. He remained registrar for 20 years, and in 1940 he became the University's first full-time treasurer and secretary.

Mr. Mattingly had a prodigious memory. He made it a point to memorize the name, face, hometown, local address and grades of every Washington and Lee student, about 600 to 700 yearly, during the 1920's and 1930's. The faculty in a tribute to him upon his retirement said he was "never more effective than when he is presenting and interpreting University purposes and problems...a task made easy by his rich background and his extraordinary memory for the names of generations of students, their families and other friends of the University."

He did not make the University a consuming interest. He was a bachelor. He worked in numerous civic affairs and was a leader in the Robert E. Lee Memorial Episcopal Church. He was a Mason and a Shriner. He was a trustee of Randolph-Macon Academy, a director of Lexington's Stonewall Jackson Hospital, a founder and the first president of the Troubadours, the University's drama organization. He was a member of Omicron Delta Kappa, national honorary leadership fraternity, of Beta Gamma Sigma, national society recognizing achievements in business and commerce, of Phi Delta Theta social fraternity.

He was, in his capacity as treasurer and secretary, emeritus, a special assistant to President Fred C. Cole.

His career was long. His retirement was brief. He died December 27, 1966, at the age 78.

Dr. Cole said in announcing Mr. Mattingly's retirement: "I know of no one who has been more loyal, more dedicated to the best interests of this University, and I know of no one who has been a greater friend to generation after generation of Washington and Lee men."

Men like "Mr. Matt" are never forgotten.
Dr. Desha Dies at Age 83

ONE DAY IN MARCH, Brewster S. Ford, associate professor of English at Virginia Military Institute and president of the Lexington English Speaking Union, came to Washington and Lee University. He brought with him a check for $500 and presented it to President Fred C. Cole.

The money was the initial contribution toward the establishment of a memorial fund in honor of Dr. Lucius Junius Desha, professor of chemistry, emeritus, at Washington and Lee, who died January 31, 1967, at the age of 83. Income from the Desha fund will help English exchange students at Washington and Lee with incidental expenses, such as books. Dr. Desha was president of the English Speaking Union for many years.

At the March meeting of the Washington and Lee faculty, Dr. Esmarch Gilreath, professor of chemistry, rose and read a resolution of respect to the memory of Dr. Desha. The resolution, submitted by Drs. Gilreath, James Keith Shillington and William Buchanan, said in part:

"...Washington and Lee lost a distinguished professor, emeritus, in the death of Lucius Junius Desha. Rarely does one person have the degree of ability, versatility, and personality that was possessed by Dr. Desha. He graduated from Washington and Lee in 1906 and attained his Ph.D. degree from Johns Hopkins University in 1909. Only brief mention will be made concerning the most notable achievements accomplished during his continuous service to his college and to his community. They most ably speak for themselves.

"As a teacher and head of the Chemistry Department, Dr. Desha taught in Washington and Lee University from 1920 to 1955. Various interruptions of his teaching career took advantage of his ability as an administrator. In 1946 he was drafted into the position as dean of the University, and in 1946 and 1949 he had charge of the University’s bicentennial program.

Even after semi-retirement, he was again called upon in 1960 to act as coordinator for the inauguration of President Cole. In 1962 he was director of the community fund campaign conducted by Friends of the Library in Lexington, which culminated in a modern city library.

"As a scholar his textbook Organic Chemistry was not only widely used but was a pioneer text in its field. He served as president of Phi Beta Kappa for two years and was the executive officer of the organization during the last thirteen years of his life. He was a member of Sigma Xi and the Omicron Delta Kappa societies.

"The members of Washington and Lee faculty and staff bear a great sorrow in the loss of an outstanding colleague. However, even in our own bereavement, we recognize the greater grief of his immediate family upon the final summons to a noble character."

Dr. Desha is survived by his wife, the former Mary Forrester, and three daughters, Mrs. Charles L. Green of Charlotte, N.C., Mrs. G. Stansbury Miller of Moorestown, N.J., and Mrs. Charles Didier of Maumee, Ohio. The family lived on the Washington and Lee campus for many years.

Dr. Desha taught chemistry at the medical school of the University of Tennessee until he joined the faculty at Washington and Lee in 1920.

He was active in the civic and social life of the community. He was a chairman of the social functions committee of the University, and he and Mrs. Desha were advisers for the Fancy Dress Ball. And at the age of 76, he took up painting and won prizes in community shows.

Some associates say that if Dr. Desha had a fault it was his tendency to take on too much work. He was active in nearly every phase of University and community life.

If it were a fault, Washington and Lee is the better for it.
Robert Lloyd Pinck, '42, was once a Saturday hero. For three years, he was an outstanding player on the Washington and Lee football team, and he was captain of the 1941 team.

Those were not championship years for the Generals. But Pinck was a durable player. He worked from the blocking back or fullback slot in the Generals' single-wing attack and backed up the strong side of the line on defense. Win or lose, Pinck turned in a creditable performance in every game he played. He excelled also in basketball and tennis.

But his prowess as a college athlete was just an interlude in his life—or rather a prelude to distinctive achievements in medicine.

In the 25 years since he won honors for Washington and Lee on the football field, Pinck has become one of the nation's foremost radiologists, a leader in the training of technicians and physicians for service in this vital field of medicine and a contributor to the literature of radiological research.

Small wonder then that on January 19, 1967, Sports Illustrated magazine conferred upon Dr. Robert Lloyd Pinck one of its Silver Anniversary All-America Awards. He was presented the magazine's goalpost trophy at the New York Touchdown Club dinner at the Americana Hotel, along with 25 other businessmen, doctors, educators, military officers and lawyers who have distinguished themselves in the 25 years since their last college football season.

One other Washington and Lee football standout has been named to the Sports Illustrated Silver Award team. Amos Alonzo Bolen, a Generals' All-America in 1933, was chosen for the award in 1958.

Dr. Pinck is now chief of the Radiology Department at Long Island College Hospital in Brooklyn. In February a year ago, he was accorded one of the highest honors in his profession. He was made a fellow in the American College of Radiology. And a month later he was appointed a member of the Committee on Education in Diagnostic Roentgenology of the American College of Radiology.

He is not only a successful physician, scientist, and educator. He has also done well in business. In 1958, he was a co-founder of the North Atlantic Life Insurance Company of America and continues as a director of the firm's executive committee.

He is a native of Passaic, N. J., and when he was 10 his family moved to Paterson. There in his first day of school he had three fist fights with progressively larger boys, and he managed to win them all. It was the last time, he said, that he was forced to settle his problems by violence. He said he remembered the incident vividly because it influenced his values of sportsmanship, and these values subsequently influenced his professional development.

After leaving Washington Lee, he enrolled at Duke University's School of Medicine and was caught... up in a war-accelerated program that forced him to complete 36 months of training without a break.

He decided to specialize in radiology while at Walter Reed Hospital during his Army duty. He later served in Europe, and while on a vacation in Switzerland he met Helene Rast, who became his wife fifteen months later.

Upon his return from Europe, Dr. Pinck resumed his training at the Tennessee University Institute of Pathology. He was accepted for a residency at Duke and later spent three months at the University Hospital in Lausanne, Switzerland, and three months at the Curie Foundation in Paris for special study in X-ray therapy.

In 1952, Dr. Pinck was named assistant attending radiologist at Roosevelt Hospital in New York City and was promoted to associate attending radiologist during his three and a half years there.

He was 35 when he was appointed chief radiologist at Long Island College Hospital. Under his direction, the hospital's Department of Radiology has grown remarkably—from 17,000 examinations in 1955 to more than 40,000 examinations last year, in addition to a heavy work load in cobalt therapy and radioactive isotopes. In 1956, a Ford Foundation grant of $250,000 to the hospital for capital improvement was devoted entirely to a new X-ray department, now one of the most modern in the world.

He said that of all his achievements he is proudest of the students that he has helped educate, both those in radiologic technology and those who have trained there as part of their medical school curriculum.

Dr. and Mrs. Pinck have three daughters: Laurie, 17; Stacy, 6; and Lili, 4.

Washington and Lee salutes Dr. Pinck.

Lynchburg Chapter Honors Dr. Shannon

Presentation of "The Lynchburg Citation" to Edgar Finley Shannon, Jr., '39, president of the University of Virginia, added a special piquancy to the annual Washington's Birthday dinner of the Lynchburg alumni chapter.

The annual award was initiated by the Hill City alumni five years ago to recognize notable achievement by an "alumnus of the year" whose accomplishments have brought honor to Washington and Lee. While no geographical restrictions limit the scope of the award, all previous recipients have been Virginians.

Actually, the Lynchburg Citation was presented to Mrs. Shannon (Sweet Briar '48) as Dr. Shannon could not be present because of an acute attack of flu. Lynchburg alumni responded enthusiastically to UVA's lovely first lady when she accepted the handsome award on behalf of her husband, asserting that "nothing could mean more to Edgar Shannon than to receive an honor bestowed by his fellow alumni. He will always have a genuine affection for his Alma Mater, as I do."

Mrs. Shannon was accompanied to Lynchburg by Paul Saunier, Jr., assistant to the president of UVA, and Mrs. Saunier. They were joined at the reception and dinner at Boonsboro Country Club by Washington and Lee President Dr. Fred Cole, Dr. and Mrs. Ollinger Crenshaw, and President Anne Gary Pannell of Sweet Briar College.

Dr. Crenshaw, chairman of the Department of History, delighted a large audience of alumni and their wives, parents of students and other guests, including a number of UVA alumni, with a humorous description of student life and discipline at Washington College during the early 1860's.

After R. C. Wood, Jr., '21L, chapter president, had read the citation, Mrs. Shannon told the meeting that her absent husband would appreciate most especially being cited for his efforts to uphold his "heritage of scholarship." (His father, the late Dr. E. F. Shannon, served on the Washington and Lee faculty for 24 years and was head of the English department during his son's undergraduate years.)

Elected to serve as chapter officers for 1967 were S. James Thompson, Jr., '57A-'59L, president; William V. Giles, Jr., '61, vice president; and John R. Alford, '57A-'59L, secretary-treasurer.
Name Your Candidate

In compliance with Article 9 of the By-Laws of the Washington and Lee Alumni, Inc., we are listing below the names and pictures of the Nominating Committee for the coming year.

Under the By-Laws, any member of the Association may submit the names of alumni to fill vacancies on the Alumni Board of Directors and the alumni representative on the University Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics.

There are three vacancies to be filled on the Alumni Board of Directors and one vacancy for the alumni representative to the University Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics. These vacancies are to be filled at the May, 1967, meeting of the Alumni Association. Members are requested to submit names of their candidates for these offices. The Nominating Committee will close its report on April 27, 1967. Present alumni directors whose terms expire this year are: H. Tyndall Dickinson, '39, Little Rock, Ark.; Robert A. A Word About the Pages Following

He makes clear the value of the Library to Washington and Lee University and, indeed, to the whole range of education.

Washington and Lee faculty members, students, and alumni will certainly in the years ahead make extensive use of this important neighboring facility.

President Fred C. Cole is a member of the Foundation Board of Directors, and the late President Francis P. Gaines was active in the organization of the Foundation. The Library is permanently linked to Washington and Lee because under its charter the president of the University is an ex officio member of the board.

Royster Lyle, Jr., secretary and curator, designed the handsome insert containing General Bradley's message.

The Editors commend it to you with pleasure.
Over a year ago, the Marshall Foundation published an illustrated booklet entitled "A New Era" in which the Foundation's progress to that time—including construction and dedication of the Library in Lexington, Virginia—and its immediate goals were graphically portrayed. "A New Era" said: "Until the research areas are fully equipped and the resources made available to scholars, the Library will have failed to achieve its principal aim. This thus becomes the Foundation's most pressing objective."

Now, following a successful fiscal year which ended July 1, I am pleased to report to the many friends of the Foundation that some of these immediate goals have been achieved. Our fund-raising efforts during the year produced approximately a quarter of a million dollars, which has enabled us to take such important material steps as furnishing the main reading room, purchasing basic library equipment, and accelerating our program of cataloguing and processing of books and periodicals and placing them on the library's shelves. Thus, though the Library is not yet fully operational, the day when it will be has been moved measurably closer. Miss Eugenia Lejeune, the Foundation's archivist-librarian, recently moved to Lexington from Washington, where she has served as the chief research assistant to the director, and is now in personal charge of the work of cataloguing and processing. With the help of additional personnel we have been able to hire as a result of recent gifts, we hope within a matter of months to have close to 10,000 books and periodicals, many of which have been in storage for years, in their places on the library's shelves and in its files.

The support the Foundation received during the year came from a wide variety of sources. Especially noteworthy were grants of $50,000 from the Old Dominion Foundation and $25,000 from the Mary W. Harriman Trust (representing a second grant, of which $6,250 was paid during the fiscal year). The Foundation received a bequest of $5,000 from the estate of the late William Zimmer, of Petersburg, Virginia, friend... and fellow cadet at VMI of General Marshall. One member of the advisory board made a gift, his third, of $5,000 and there were numerous other instances of persons who repeated earlier contributions. Also noteworthy was an appropriation of $100,000 made during the year by the General Assembly of the State of Virginia, the first annual $50,000 installment of which was paid after the end of the fiscal year. Previous appropriations by the State have totalled $100,000 designated for the construction of the building, while the current appropriation has been earmarked for furnishings and equipment.

Equally heartening were the many small gifts we received from individuals from all over the country who were desirous of paying tribute to General Marshall. Last summer, for example, during the course of an interview on the Tom Duggan Television Show in California, I mentioned the Library and suggested that gifts were needed. As a result, we received several hundred, many accompanied by letters expressing appreciation of the services General Marshall performed for his country.

• • Turning from financial matters, the year was an active one for the Foundation in a variety of ways. The second volume of the Foundation-sponsored biography of General Marshall, entitled George C. Marshall: Ordeal and Hope, 1939-1942, was completed by Dr. Forrest C. Pogue, Marshall Library director. It is to appear in bookstores all over the nation in early winter. It covers the period from the day George Marshall took the oath of office as Chief of Staff in 1939 to the Allied landings in North Africa near the end of 1942. This volume succeeds the first volume, George C. Marshall: Education of a General, 1880-1939, which was published in October, 1963. Remaining volumes covering the rest of General Marshall’s career, as Chief of Staff, 1943-1945, and his activities as Secretary of State and Secretary of Defense are still to come. During the past year, the Director was named to a special board which will advise on the editing of the papers of former President Eisenhower by the Johns Hopkins University and to a panel which reviewed the Armed Forces History exhibits in the Smithsonian’s Museum of History and Technology.
The Marshall Library's eventual function as an educational institution has become more apparent during the year due to its increasing connection with Lexington's two colleges, Washington and Lee University and the Virginia Military Institute. Cadets, students and wives of students have been employed by the Library in various capacities—as museum guides, cataloguers, and secretaries. The museum has been visited by hundreds of students and parents, as well as alumni of both schools, and the library staff has been able to furnish information to both students and cadets in their research on assigned subjects. I may say that the special value of the Library to both VMI and Washington and Lee has been reflected to a considerable extent by the financial support we have received from those connected in some capacity with both schools. At the same time the staff has entertained many groups from area grade and high schools and has answered a large number of queries from them about General Marshall and recent history.

Other matters of interest to Foundation supporters which took place during the year:

The Library was given the highly important papers and documents of the late Lieutenant General Lucian K. Truscott, Jr., whose distinguished service in World War II as a strategist and field commander included command of U.S. Fifth Army in Italy. The papers were presented by General Truscott's son, Lieutenant Colonel L. K. Truscott, III, as a result of a wish expressed by his father before his death. As a supplement to our collection, this material is of great value. Another recent gift of considerable value was a diary kept during World War I by the senior aide of General Hunter Liggett, who succeeded General Pershing as commander of First U.S. Army in France. General Marshall was chief of operations of Liggett’s Army during part of this period and is mentioned in the diary.

Earlier in the Spring, we received from Colonel Collas Harris of Great Falls, Virginia, an extensive collection of material on the occupation of Japan as well as a large number of military journals and books. Colonel Harris was a member of General MacArthur’s staff during the occupation.

Attendance at the museum increased markedly during the year. This may be in part attributed to a vigorous over-all publicity campaign conducted by the Library staff which not only resulted in numerous articles carried by newspapers in many sections of the country, but illustrated feature articles published by such magazines as Trailways Magazine, Commonwealth, the magazine of the Virginia Chamber of Commerce, the

Dr. Forrest C. Pogue (right), Library director, interviews Brigadier General Frank McCarthy, former Secretary, General Staff under General Marshall.
Virginia Journal of Education, the Wilson Library Bulletin, and others. Look Magazine, which published an article drawn from the first volume of the Marshall biography at the time of publication, carried last December a condensed version of the forthcoming volume's Pearl Harbor account. Articles such as these undoubtedly not only increase museum attendance, but draw attention to its primary function as an educational and research institution.

Henrik Martin Mayer, well-known Connecticut artist, was commissioned during the year by the National Academy of Design to execute a mural for the Library and preliminary sketches were approved. The mural, which will be completed in 1967, will occupy one wall of the Library's main lecture and seminar room.

The Library staff during the year began planning for a suitable observance of the twentieth anniversary in 1967 of the inception of the Marshall Plan of economic aid to Europe. The Library also hopes to take part in ceremonies next year when the twenty-cent stamp honoring General Marshall is issued.

The Library is constantly receiving requests for information concerning General Marshall from college and graduate students as well as historical researchers and is always happy to give them assistance. The Foundation recently was given special credit in the preface to The Hilt of the Sword, a biography of General Peyton C. March, World War I Chief of Staff, for having helped make the work possible. The author, Dr. Edward Coffman, served for a year as a research assistant to Dr. Pogue and at the same time was able to gather material for his book.

In addition to these activities, we were also able to continue our extensive program of historical research being carried out in our Washington office under the direction of Dr. Pogue and to finance the day-to-day operations of the Library and its museum in Lexington. Thus, thanks to the gifts we received, the year was most certainly one in which the Library moved closer to the day when it will become the fully-functioning research institution it was designed to be from the start.

When will that day come?

It will be reached when our endowment is sufficient—at least $2,500,000—to remove in part the burden of continuous fund-raising efforts. This is the minimum sum required not only to maintain the Library but to make possible continuance of such important phases of our activities as the oral history program, a field in which the Foundation already has been a pioneer, to grant fellowships to worthy scholars in the field of diplomatic and military history, to sponsor seminars and symposiums, and to publish the fruits of serious research so that they may be widely available and of maximum value.

We have already made a modest start on an endowment, but the bulk of our annual income since completion of the Library has of necessity been used to meet our annual operating expenses of approximately eighty to one hundred thousand dollars as well as to pay for the needed additional equipment and furnishings. We have been, and we will continue to be, active in our efforts to raise the endowment and we are hopeful that in coming months our efforts will bear fruit in the form of major grants from leading philanthropical trusts for which we have prepared appeals.

I feel that the endowment must be achieved as rapidly as possible. To reach our goals, we must seek not only major grants from large philanthropic trusts—we must receive support on an ever-widening basis from the general public and we must hope for continuing support from those who by their gifts have already demonstrated that they are interested in the full development of this tribute to a great American. We must hope for an increase in the number of those who have placed the Library on their annual giving program and who mention the Library in their wills. And we must hope for the continued advice and counsel of those who are in a position to aid us in our efforts.

If these hopes and efforts are realized, I feel confident that at this time next year, I will be able to report on a year of continued activity and progress toward our ultimate objectives.

REUNIONS

Cy Young, '17, and Bob Spessard, '39, are laughing. We don't know exactly why. The point is that they are laughing. That happens when Washington and Lee men get together. They talk, they laugh, they enjoy themselves, they are happy to be back on campus.

This scene will be repeated many times when the Classes of 1917, 1927, 1942, 1952 and 1957 hold their reunions on May 12, 13 and 14.

We hope that every member of these classes will attend. Come back. Bring your wives. Enjoy yourselves. Have some laughs like Cy and Bob.
