"REMEMBER WHEN," or do you suppose I really wore that hat!

INSPIRATION

IN January, Mr. W. W. Boxley of Roanoke, for many years a member of the Board of Visitors of V. M. I. (and father of our beloved L. J.), died. He left to both the Institute and the University endowment for a full scholarship to make possible forever the education of a boy at each of these two schools.

A few days later, Mr. Robert M. Hughes of Norfolk, for a great number of years a member of the William and Mary Board, died. He left an insurance policy for one thousand dollars with Washington and Lee as beneficiary.

* * *

In the fall of last year, Clark Turrell, one of the finest and most attractive members of our senior class, lost his life. His parents have contributed in his memory a scholarship fund, the income of which will materially aid two boys every year in their pursuit of learning and character on our campus.

* * *

In the spring of last year, Mrs. William A. Glasgow, Jr., of Philadelphia (lovely "Aunt Jean" to those of us who knew her) died, leaving in memory of her husband, one of the most distinguished of our alumni, a scholarship fund that also will make possible the education of two boys for every future session of the University.

A few days prior to the writing of these lines, Shirley Riley, devoted Roanoke alumnus, passed away, leaving to his Alma Mater two thousand dollars "for the aid of deserving boys."

* * *

These five gifts represent approaches by widely different angles of affection; but they are alike in being the product of considered judgment and unselfish concern for

Washington and Lee, for the enlargement and the endurance of its service.

* * *

In this moment of deep emotion, I can not forget other gifts, some sent in from unexpected sources, like the gift of $100 as a Christmas present from an honored California lawyer having no personal relation of any kind with the school. I am mindful, too, of the hundreds of alumni who use the class agent plan as the mode of expressing their interest.

* * *

Indeed, I am truly grateful for the encouragements of heartening letters, the phrasings of affectionate reminiscence. A few minutes before I began to write, I opened a letter from a brilliant young alumnus of the class of 1937 and found among other generous comment this statement: "It is only regrettable that all the people of our country and the leaders of the nations of the world do not have an opportunity to learn of the beautiful life—in the atmosphere of Washington and Lee."

* * *

Those of us who, living at this institution which is the center of affection so impressive, are entrusted with administering these aids would testify that they represent more than financial stimulus or encouragements. They are the renewals of inspiration. To think of them is to see a stronger Washington and Lee and to know in our hearts a stronger faith.

34th Fancy Dress Honors Kentucky Alumni

SINCE you all heard it over the air, we write this at the risk of being repetitious, but we shall try to be brief. While you were listening to Kay Kyser's orchestra and to Dr. Gaines' speech, we were on the running track of the gym, and if you had been there with us, you would have had an even more vivid impression of Fancy Dress than the one you got from your radio. If we ever saw anything accurately describable as a "sea of faces," that was it. You know, of course, the extent of the gymnasium floor. Well, there wasn't any floor. There was hardly a space left that wasn't just this sea of faces and tops of heads, and costumes—mostly red. We discovered later that the owners of these faces were not sitting in chairs as we had thought but were seated on the floor. (One young lady confessed to us that had the girls been wearing their own dresses, this wouldn't have happened!)

Gazing thoughtfully at this scene, we decided not to try to dance. There were apparently some fifteen hundred others who wanted to do so, and our skill is limited. However, we have proved by an extensive survey of opinion that the other fifteen hundred not only danced but enjoyed it, that it was the best Fancy Dress ever, and that anyone not present or not taking part was really missing something.

This year's ball was dedicated to the Washington and Lee alumni of Kentucky, and the theme was Kentucky in 1875 when Aristides won the first running of the Kentucky Derby and with it the mere pittance of $2,850. Since then, we understand, the horses have done better.

The Figure had to do with a party after the race, held at "Federal Hill," which was the home of Colonel John Rowan II and the original "Old Kentucky Home" of the song. This house, represented on the south side of the gym as a brick mansion with white pillars, was surrounded on the other three sides by the sky and distant views on canvas. The opening scene of the pageant which the Figure presented, disclosed the band, which previously had played for the Derby crowd at Churchill Downs, set up on the porch of the famous old Rowan spring-house; a stable boy on guard at the hitching yard gate; and pickaninies (represented by Fontaine Gilliam and Edwin Gaines), who had slipped away from quarters to keep a watchful eye on the "goings-on up at the Big House."

Then entered Ernest Woodward II and Miss Dolly Burks as Colonel and Mrs. Rowan who were making anxious last-minute arrangements for the ball in honor of Colonel and Mrs. H. P. McGrath (represented by Howard Dobbins and Miss Virginia Ann Jones), owners of Aristides. They had hardly got to first base in this matter (as so often happens before parties) when Governor Leslie of Kentucky and his "First Lady" came in in the person of John Winn Watson, Jr., president of the ball, and Miss Mary Charlotte Garber. Other prominent Kentuckians then appeared, and soon they all drank Mint Juleps (represented by gingerale) to the health of the Governor, the horse, and other important people of the moment.

When the last guest had been greeted, and after each had paid his respects to Governor Leslie, Colonel Rowan reminded his guests that "My Old Kentucky Home," written at Federal Hill in 1852 to Stephen Collins Foster's music is always sung at Federal Hill functions, and presented Miss Ginny Simms to sing it.

Jockey Oliver Lewis, rider of Aristides, was presented to the Governor and other guests, and, as a symbol of his victory, was decorated with a horseshoe of roses by the "First Lady of Kentucky." After that, the couples in the Figure waltzed away to the tune of "Jeannie With the Light Brown Hair." Subsequently the music was all Kay Kyser, swing, and enthusiasm.

The costumes were very colorful and realistic this year. Many of the more daring prospective 1875 Kentuckians even went so far as to grow extensive sideburns and other forms of whiskers to carry out the scheme. We believed at first that this was only the old superstition of never shaving during examinations but turned out to be wrong as usual. Most of the men were either Kentucky Colonels, Landowners, Track Officials, River Gamblers, or Jockeys, all in appropriate garb. Most of the ladies were hoop-skirted, low necked, beautiful, and generally quite up-to-date.

It was an affair that future alumni will never forget whether they had a good time or not. And they did.

About Our Covers

GETTING away from the series of campus scenes and personalities which make up the stock-in-trade covers for alumni magazines, we are presenting, this time, a picture of a wood-carved Washington and Lee coat-of-arms—not the official seal, which would not have been as appropriate for this sort of work, but the one which appears on the bookplates of fine books in the library.

The carving was done by Miss Mary Barclay, secretary to Cy Young, who has been producing beautiful work of this kind for five years. Starting with no previous experience, she has rapidly become an expert, able to turn out a magnificently-carved candle-chest for Queen Elizabeth of England. The hobby is expanding now into a thriving business with orders for all sorts of carved objects coming in to Miss Barclay. We think this particular piece makes a cover to be proud of.

The snow-scenes that appear on the back cover were taken by Henry Austin Cooke, 1942, after one of the recent arctic blizzards.

Photographs from old Calyxes of the pictures appearing on pages 2, 16 and 17 are the work of Thomas Fleming, 1942.

JOE ARNOLD, LL.B. 1937, has become a member of the firm of Allen, Duncan and Duncan of Lexington, Kentucky. The new firm will be called Allen, Ducan, Duncan and Arnold.

MAJOR FRANK HAYNE, 1915, has the interesting post at present of military attaché to the American Legation in Finland.

W. GOODRIDGE SALE, JR., B.A. 1924 and LL.B 1927, has become a partner in the firm of Brown, Jackson and Knight of Charleston, West Virginia.

Greetings from President Lykes

MY FELLOW ALUMNI:

On behalf of your official representatives, I would send each of you hearty 1940 greetings. Particularly would I thank sincerely those members who have rendered such fine assistance to their association during the past year. The members of your Council and Board of Trustees have all evidenced their interest and loyalty in a substantial and helpful manner.

We can all feel a satisfaction in the improvement within our organic structure: namely, securing the exclusive time of our able secretary and the broadening of control of your management to a larger number of individual alumni chapters. In this accomplishment we are indebted much to Dr. Gaines and the University Board of Trustees.

And what about the future? Catastrophe has overcome a large part of the world. The ideals, as represented by our Alma Mater, should be the guiding light for us. Let us each, therefore, do his full share toward their perpetuation. Contributing to the welfare of Washington and Lee is a contribution to the welfare of future generations.

JOSEPH T. LYKES,

President Washington and Lee Alumni, Inc.

Paul C. Buford Honored by Shenandoah Life

LAST October, when the Shenandoah Life Insurance Company underwent a reorganization which called for new management of the most reliable and efficient type, the Board of Directors promptly called upon Paul C. Buford, A.B. 1913 and LL.B. 1915, to be their chairman, and general counsel for the concern. On December 5 it was announced that, following the death of E. Lee Trinkle, former president of the company, Mr. Buford had been elected president. He is also to be a member of the board and to retain his position as general counsel. Though there had been expressions of doubt over the soundness of the company, these doubts were dispelled as Mr. Buford took office. "The appointment meets with my entire approval," said George A. Bowles, Virginia commissioner of insurance. "The board has made a very wise choice."

Mr. Buford is taking over a big job which might be called a credit not only to him but to the college and law school that trained him, because the company of which he is to have charge, with assets of over nine million dollars, stands forty-ninth in volume of business among the three hundred insurance companies in the United States. He will have to lead a big organization through a difficult period.

Paul C. Buford, though he has been identified with the city of Roanoke for twenty-four years, was born in Lafayette County, Mississippi, in 1893, and he lived in Mississippi and Tennessee until he came to Lexington for an education. He also went to school at the Mississippi Heights Academy and at the Southwestern Presbyterian University at Clarksville, Tennessee, which is now Southwestern at Memphis, Washington and Lee's erstwhile football rival. While an undergraduate, he was a member of Alpha Tau Omega, Phi Delta Phi and White Friars; and in his senior academic year he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa.

The practice of law, which he began in Roanoke in 1915, was interrupted by the war two years later when Mr. Buford entered the Second Officers' Training Camp at Fort Myer, Virginia. As Second Lieutenant of Field Artillery he served with the Third Field Artillery regiment in France from August 1918 to May 1919. He was promoted to a first lieutenantcy and was discharged at Camp Dix in May, 1919.

His service to the bar and to the city of Roanoke has been continuous and constructive. His first connection was with the law firm of Martin and Chitwood, but since 1926 he and Mr. Harvey T. Hall have been associated under the firm name of Hall, Buford and Carter. He has been successful in law and business, having been a director of the Colonial-American National Bank and the Comas Cigarette Machine Company before his appointment to the Board of the Shenandoah Life. He is a member of the Roanoke, Virginia State, and American Bar Associations and of the American Judicature Society and is a past president of the Roanoke Bar Association.

Meanwhile, however, he has always been able to find time to engage in civic and charitable activities. He has served on the Board of Trustees of the Roanoke Com-

George Washington Custis Lee

By JAS. LEWIS HOWE

(NOTE: As University Historian, Dr. Howe is working on the administration of General G. W. Custis Lee; he would be very glad to receive any reminiscences of student life during this period, and especially any personal recollections of General Lee.)

IN studying the history of Washington and Lee during the administration of General Custis Lee (1871-1897) it has been interesting to note the paucity of recollections of him on the part of the old students and others who came into contact with him. Two memories stand out in the minds of all: his extreme courtesy and his equally extreme bashfulness. One who was brought up in Lexington in the seventies writes that "he was very reserved and even bashful. I had the pleasure of coming in contact with him on several occasions, when a boy, but to save my life I cannot remember one incident growing out of this contact that would be of interest." (John R. Senseny, Alexandria, Louisiana.)

Custis Lee was professor at the Virginia Military Institute for five years before becoming president of Washington and Lee. He was professor of Military and Civil Engineering, or as he seems always to have put it, "Civil and Military Engineering," but for two years at least he had also the exclusive charge of the two upper classes in Chemistry. A cadet of the period writes: "It is very hard to remember anything particular about him, except that the cadets always had great respect for him as a man and instructor; we found him to be very retiring; . . . very different from General Jackson, who was often ridiculed by the cadets but looked up to as a man of very great learning. The only thing I can recall is that in dismissing the section under instruction, General Lee would say: 'That is all today, gentlemen,' very different from finishing with the other instructors.'" (J. L. Waring, Wilmington, Ohio.)

One who has since attained great distinction as educator and publicist (Dr. James H. Dillard, Charlottesville) writes: "I saw General Custis, as we called him, almost every day during the four years when I was at Washington and Lee University, and occasionally, especially in my last year, I had a brief conversational contact with him. My earliest impression was that in him were embodied all the qualities, manners and characteristics of a perfect gentleman.

"This impression has continued and deepened during the years that have passed. One could not but be impressed by his air of gentleness. This might be mistaken by some and taken as a sign of weakness or indifference, but gentleness like his had in it not the slightest touch of weakness or indifference.

President G. W. Custis Lee, 1871-1897

"A friend of mine for some failure or misdemeanor, was summoned to appear before the president. As he came out of the office I happened to meet him. I asked him how he got on, and his reply was that he was 'certainly sorry for the General.' I can understand how General Lee's words and manner lacked the tone of severe reproof, but I have no doubt that what the General said did my rather idle friend far more good than would have been accomplished by a harsh rebuke.

"It is an utterly false interpretation to think of gentleness like his as savoring at all of lack of courage and effectiveness. I have always been thankful for my acquaintance with this ideal type of Christian manhood."

Bishop Winchester, who was a student under both General Robert E. Lee and under his son, says: "General Custis Lee stands out in my memory a picture of stainless manhood, dignified humility and Christian faith, which deeply impressed me. His was a striking figure as he walked over the beautiful campus, sat in his quiet office, or visited the classrooms, when the students, in deference rose to do him the honor they felt he so well deserved.

"One of the distinguishing marks in his personal appearance at all times was exquisite neatness in his dress. It was understood in Lexington that in summer he put on a fresh linen suit daily. He was an example to the students in this respect." (May it not be that Washington and Lee's reputation of having the neatest-dressed student body in the United States traces back to the influence of President Custis Lee? J. L. H.)

"His attendance upon services in the college chapel during the week and upon his church services on Sunday was marked with a reverence that I felt permeated his heart and mind. And so I think of him today as a man sent of God to be an example to his devoted students. Having had two such presidents as Generals Robert E. Lee and George Washington Custis Lee I naturally realize that my life has been wonderfully blessed, and I am thankful that my Alma Mater has been presided over by successors who have transmitted the same Christian virtues that the father and son of the Southern Confederacy bequeathed Washington and Lee."

When the choice of a successor to General Robert E. Lee as president was being debated by the trustees, one or two members of the Board raised an objection to General Custis Lee on the ground that he was not a church member, although they recognized him as a Christian gentleman. It is to be noted that the first time the bishop visited Lexington after General Custis Lee's election and before his inauguration, he presented himself for the rite of Confirmation.

A former professor of Washington and Lee (Addison Hogue) tells this incident: "Beyond his quiet and courteous manner I remember only this joke on 'C' (a faculty colleague), though General Lee did not mean it as a joke. 'C' had torn into bits a piece of paper, and then rose to throw them into a waste-paper basket. One tiny piece fell on the floor, and 'C' either did not notice it, or else thought it made no difference. General Lee very courteously waited a few minutes, and then rose and picked up the piece and deposited it in the basket. A smile went around the room, as we all glanced at 'C'. To this day I think of it when I stoop down and pick up a wee scrap of paper." The self-effacement of Custis Lee is clearly apparent when this is the sole recollection regarding him of one who sat with him for some three years on the faculty.

Of Custis Lee as a neighbor, we have the following from one who, in her girlhood, lived next door to the president's house. "He was so self-effacing and retiring that while we have very happy memories of him, there are not so many salient incidents to recall. Well do I remember the morning he called to welcome us to our new home in Lexington and to Washington and Lee. He wore no beard then, but a moustache, and with his iron-gray hair, erect carriage and courtly manner I felt I had never seen a more handsome man. The General was the kindest of neighbors, and many a time there was served at our table some delicacy he had sent mother. I recall on one occasion Patterson, his butler, appeared bearing the largest tray I had ever seen. It held some very fine Lynnhaven oysters on the half-shell. I have never forgotten that appetizing lay-out.

"Another incident I recall was when the General sent for a student, who was not at all measuring up to the requirements of Washington and Lee, to come to his office. The General broke the news so gently and pleasantly to the student that his name would be erased from the Register of the student body, that, on meeting some of his fellow-students after the interview he remarked to them, 'General Lee is the finest man I know and he is so kind; he told me that I couldn't be feeling well, and would better return home.' With one accord his listeners shouted, 'Why boy, don't you know you've been fired?'"

I close with one of several recollections furnished me by Dr. Leslie L. Campbell, who was a student (and Ph.D.) of the University in the eighties, which again illustrates General Lee's method of dealing with students. "One clear afternoon, when House Mountain seemed but a stone's throw away, four rampant students, W. C. Ludwig, J. W. W. Bias, Paul M. Penick and the writer, struck out to see the sunset and the sunrise from the top of the mountain. As the students walked on, the mountain receded, and only allowed weary feet to reach the top about

Radio Executive at Thirty

ANYONE who has a couple of good radio stations to sell might run over to Lexington, Kentucky, and talk with a member of the class of 1931 who seems to buy and sell radio stations and newspapers as if they were hot-cakes. As president of the Southern Network, the corporation in charge of the Mutual Broadcasting System's expansion throughout the South, Gilmore Nunn has a big job, and it would look as though much of the radio business of the south and southwest might come under his wing before he gets through.

Today, Gilmore Nunnelley Nunn is exclusively in the radio business, but his start was as a newspaper man. Born in 1910 in Amarillo, Texas, he received grammar-school education in several parts of the southwest and began his newspaper career "as a punk peddling papers on a corner when a few summers old." He continued in various newspaper jobs until he came to Washington and Lee, where he graduated with an A.B. and also walked off with a Certificate in Journalism. He was then made general manager of the Rosewell (New Mexico) Morning Dispatch as well as vice-president of the New Mexico Publishing Company, both of which were founded by his grandfather and then carried on by his father who gradually built up the Lindsay-Nunn Publishing Company, owning newspapers in many southwestern towns.

In 1931 he married Miss Josephine Townsend of Amarillo, and they went to live in Roswell. In 1932, however, he was transferred to Pampa, Texas, where he became general manager of the Pampa Daily News. By this time there were three in the family, a daughter, Betsy Townsend, having been born that year. During Roosevelt's first term, Mr. Nunn was to be found in Washington as newspaper correspondent and political columnist.

It was after this that he and his father became interested in the possibilities of radio as an adjunct to the newspaper business, and they began to acquire and construct stations in the southwest. In 1936 they purchased the Lexington Harald and American Broadcasting Company in Lexington, Kentucky, where younger Nunn now repaired to head both concerns. Then the Nunns decided radio was to be their chief interest, and the newspaper was dropped. After that they set out to increase their radio holdings. In 1939 they acquired the Ashland Broadcasting Corporation, operating WCMI with studios in Ashland, Kentucky, Huntington, West Virginia, and Ironton, Ohio. They then constructed KFDA in Amarillo, Texas. To complete the organization, the Southern Network was formed in July, 1939, with headquarters in the Lexington Radio Building. It looks as though the acquiring process will go on, with Station KROD of El Paso (now being constructed), next in line.

Outside of his business, Mr. Nunn's interests are wide, as would be shown by the organizations he is connected with. Having started in college as a member of Phi Kappa Psi, Pi Delta Epsilon, Sigma Delta Chi, White Friars, Troubadours, Glee Club, and director of the band and the Southern Collegians, he became, after graduation, a member of the New Mexico State Central Committee, Texas NRA official, official of the Texas Racing Association, member of the Executive Committee Texas Democratic campaign, president West Texas Young Democrats, president of Tampa Board of Trade, president of the Lexington Board of Trade, chairman of Lexington and Fayette Board of Aviation, member of the City Zoning Commission, on the National Advisory Committee on Radio, director of the Kentucky Press Association, and director of the Community Chest. He belongs to the National Press Club, National Association of Broadcasters, Rotary, Pyramid, and the Iroquois Hunt and Polo Club.

For a man only thirty, all this put together is real achievement. What the future will bring forth ought to be even more brilliant.

munity Fund, is past president and now a director of the Roanoke Chamber of Commerce, is vice-president of the Roanoke Tuberculosis Association, a member of the Roanoke Kiwanis Club, the Shenandoah Club, the American Legion, and the Military Order of the World War. He is a member of the Second Presbyterian Church, of which he has been an Elder for some years.

Mr. Buford was married in 1924 to Anne Warren of Evanston, Illinois. They have three children, Anne, 14, Guy Warren, 9, and Paul C., Jr., 7.

BEIRNE STEDMAN, LL.B. 1909, has spent twenty-five years as a writer on legal subjects. He was associate editor of Michie on Banks and Banking; of the Encyclopedic Digest of Florida Reports; of Michie's Digest of Tennessee Reports and of various other legal publications of recognized superiority. He collaborated for many years in editing the Encyclopedia of United States Supreme Court Reports and its various supplements.

JOHN T. MCVAY, 1926, has recently become national advertising manager for the Huntington Publishing Company of Huntington, West Virginia, publishers of three newspapers there. To quote the company's announcement: "Mr. McVay has been connected with our office for twelve years since graduation from Washington and Lee where a B.S. in Business Administration and several seasons of football, basketball and crew prepared him for today's business appointment."

midnight. After a sleepless night, by a fire that reddened their eyes with smoke, the sadder, if not wiser students made their weary way, breakfastless, direct back to college, which they reached several hours after their first classes. Bedraggled and faint, they made their way in trepidation to General Lee's office. As was his custom, General Lee arose, and stood quietly, while the students endeavored to explain that they had expected to reach home in time for breakfast and for college. All that General Lee said to the luckless students was: "Young Gentlemen, the next time you leave town to spend the night, it would be well to get permission before you leave."

Basketball and Wrestling Off to Good Start

By BUD LEVY, 1942

STALLED somewhat by the mid-year examination period, Washington and Lee's winter sports machines shifted into high gear with the coming of February and got under way the second half of what promises to be a highly-successful season.

The varsity basketball team, piloted for the first time by Coach Harold B. (Cookie) Cunningham, was among the leaders of both the State and Southern Conference races as it began its post-examination drive. The blue-clad courtmen registered eight victories in their first ten assignments, and these were enough to put them in third place in both standings as February made its bow. North Carolina and Duke were the only clubs ahead of the Generals in the fifteen-team Conference race, while the University of Virginia and Richmond were tops in the twelve-team State scramble.

Coach Archie Mathis' wrestlers were well on the way to another undefeated season as they headed for the home stretch. The matmen, although plagued with injuries, put their first three foes to rout with little difficulty.

And the swimming team, beaten out in the Conference race for the first time in five years last season, hit the comeback trail with success in its first engagement, downing North Carolina State, 42-33.

Highlights of the first half of the basketball season were victories over Maryland and Western State Teachers College, of Kentucky. Cunningham's cagers whipped Maryland in their own back yard on January 20 in a game which the dopsters had figured as a "sure thing" for the Terps. And the whipping was a thorough one, too. The score was 44-25. Maryland had previously scored over Clemson's Conference champs, Duke, Richmond, and Princeton.

The Generals topped Western Teachers, long-time rulers of the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Association, by a 44-34 count at Louisville during their Christmas vacation trip. Also beaten on that jaunt was Morris-Harvey, of West Virginia, which fell at Charleston, 52-40.

Other Washington and Lee victories have come at the expense of V. P. I., which was beaten twice (34-25 and 42-22), and Randolph-Macon by a 43-27 tally. The Generals' first two triumphs, scored at the expense of Danville and Alfred Holbrook of Ohio, were reviewed in the last issue of THE ALUMNI MAGAZINE. Wake Forest, first-division Conference outfit, and George Washington University were the only teams to beat the Generals in their first ten starts.

Dick Pinck, sharp-shooting forward, and Howard Dobbins, towering center, have been the spearheads of the Generals' attack this year. Pinck, who will be remembered for his 34-point performance against Richmond last year, tossed in 116 points in his team's first ten games, and stood fifth among the Old Dominion's point-getters early in February. Dobbins was close behind with 107 points.

Returning to school after the Christmas holidays, Mathis' wrestlers lost little time in getting their 1940 campaign off to a good start. They posted a 33-3 win over Richmond's Y.M.C.A.

outfit a couple of days after their return, and a few days later routed West Virginia's forces, 28-8, before 3,000 persons in Morgantown. A week later, the General matmen dropped North Carolina State, 25-5, in Doremus gymnasium.

Tommy Fuller, unbeaten captain of last year's freshman grapplers, has scored falls in each of this year's three varsity matches to lead the Generals in individual performance. Fuller is a 145-pounder. George McInerney, 135, veteran of three seasons of varsity mat wars, has won two falls and a decision in his three matches this year, while Harold Reed, who took over the 121-pound burden this year after winning an intramural title last winter, scored falls in each of his first two varsity bouts and won the third on a decision. Captain Henry Braun won on a forfeit, a fall and a decision in his first three starts, while Barney Farrier, 165-pound veteran, started with a decision and then pinned his next two foemen.

Arkansas Boyhood

THE UNWILLING JOURNEY. By C. P. Lee, 1932. 303 pp. Macmillan, $2.50.

Mr. C. P. Lee's first novel, The Unwilling Journey, is a story of boyhood and youth in Arkansas during the 1920's. We are first introduced to the hero, Richard Hanna, when, a boy of ten or eleven years, he is living in the dusty village of Matthews, a town of two or three houses, a store, and a railway station at which the daily train stops only on signal. His father, who is the clerk in the store, is a pleasant man with little ambition; but his mother, not an entirely pleasant woman, is nevertheless determined and capable, and not at all satisfied with the opportunities for education and social advancement that Matthews provides her son. Her dissatisfaction is quite understandable, for there is no school in the town, and Richard's only companions are the negroes and a little girl, the daughter of haughty neighbors, to whose plantation home he is occasionally invited. His is a barren life, and though he has known nothing else, he begins to sense its emptiness through his mother's discontent. His pleasures are solitary ones—playing by himself in the barn, wandering through the cotton fields, or lying under the trees by the bayous, listening to the strange and sometimes beautiful sounds of the natural world around him. As an occasional diversion he is taken to visit relatives, mostly hard, disappointed, or morose and neurotic women, whose manner of life, if slightly more prosperous than that of his parents, is quite as lonely and cheerless. From these surroundings the family is suddenly removed, bed and bolster, by Richard's mother, whose scheming for a fuller life for her son has at last resulted in finding her husband a position in the metropolis of Pine Bluff, which is enjoying the last booming years of the twenties. Here the family settles down to the humdrum routine of middle-class city life, and Richard goes to school for the first time. At school he gets along without distinguishing himself, falls in love without daring to speak to his inamorata, and comes up against the distressing and mysterious problems of adolescence. When the boom breaks and his father loses his job, Richard begins to show that, wherever his affections may lie, he is the son of his mother. Through his attempts to earn money for his family while his father is unemployed, he becomes fully aware of the ugliness and vulgarity of the average man's life; and although he has not yet finished high school when the book closes, the reader does not doubt that he will do all he can to keep his future from being cut to the common pattern.

Although the narrative drags in places, particularly during the early chapters, and although the author fails, in this critic's opinion, to delineate his characters with sufficient sharpness (even Richard during the Matthews years is too much the average boy to be an individual), the story is well told—at times eloquently told. But the best part of the novel is not the history of Richard's career. Its strength lies in the picture it gives of social dissolution and in its vivid and sensitive descriptions of the Arkansas landscape. As a study of social decay it contrasts the slow, picturesque disintegration of the agricultural civilization which the first families had brought to Arkansas, with the rapid, ugly, frightening collapse of the commercialized society that had supplanted it. The author has a gift for making the reader share in the melancholy gloom or disappointed hardness that has eaten into the lives and surroundings of these last remnants of the agricultural aristocracy, as he makes us shudder at the ugliness, brutality, and insecurity of the new era. For the sights and sounds of the world around him the author has a keen eye and a sensitive ear. The dusty, choking, insufferable heat of the hero's home town and of the surrounding territory; the lush, entangled woods that edge the bayous; the green, slimy water of the bayous themselves, as well as the vulgar, ugly sights and sounds of the metropolis of Pine Bluff remain vividly in the reader's memory. Particularly commendable is the author's description of a country barbecue, which is done with admirable realism and with occasional touches of humor and satire. The preacher who, advancing to the stand to give the invocation before the "speaking," automatically extended both hands, "palm upward, as a signal for the audience to rise, although none were seated," the political speech and the baby-kissing, the perspiring women and scabby babies, the hunks of barbecue, fly-infested, the grounds, strewn with paper and half-consumed buns and stained with tobacco juice, are not lovely sights, but they are authentic Americana. This chapter is perhaps the best in the book.

The Unwilling Journey is too unevenly inspired to be called a great book, but for a first novel it is unusually good. One can say, truthfully, that this novel introduces a writer of considerable promise.

ROWLAND W. NELSON

Dr. Tucker on Tax Exemption

The January issue of the Southern Economic Journal carries an article by Dean Robert H. Tucker called "Some Aspects of Intergovernmental Tax Exemption." This was Dr. Tucker's presidential address to the Southern Economic Association, and it deals with the evil effects produced by tax-exemption securities. A stimulating discussion, it suggests curt interpretation as a remedy.

Local Alumni Association Notes

Cincinnati

ON last Saturday, December 23, the Cincinnati alumni had their Christmas luncheon in one of the private dining rooms of the Metropole Hotel. The following graduates and students were present:

Dr. Pearce talked briefly to the gathering. He stated that though he had attended seven universities, three in this country and four abroad, his real allegiance was to Washington and Lee. He also told several rather interesting and humorous incidents which occurred during his years in Lexington.

Clyde Hoge told of his football days and specifically about the last game he played against Virginia just preceding the long period in which there were no athletic relations between the institutions whatever.

Harry Gassman also addressed a few remarks to the group and particularly to twelve of the boys who had graduated from Walnut Hills High School and who, during their years there, had each attended his classes in mathematics.

There also were short talks by some of the younger graduates.

Dr. Gaines and Cy Young to Visit Alumni Chapters

DURING February and March Dr. Gaines is going on an extensive speaking tour, during which he will visit six alumni chapters. On February 29 he will be in Chattanooga, on March 1 in Birmingham, on the fourth, New Orleans; fifth Houston; sixth Dallas; and finally on March 7, in San Antonio.

Cy's trip will take him on the twentieth of February to Jacksonville, to Tampa on Washington's Birthday, and to Miami on the twenty-third. He will then make a long hop to Chicago where he expects to be on March 8 and in Cleveland on March 11.

San Antonio

HONORING the birthday of General Robert E. Lee on January 19, the San Antonio alumni met in the St. Anthony Hotel for a dinner and business meeting.

The meeting was presided over by Albert Steves, Jr., of the class of 1906. As master of ceremonies, he introduced R. R. Witt of the class of 1913, who spoke informally on his experiences at Washington and Lee and of the friendships he had made while in school.

After dinner the following officers of the local association were elected for the coming year: Russell B. Wine of the class of 1912, President; W. W. Fowlkes of the class of 1935, Vice-President; Albert Steves III of the class of 1930, Secretary-Treasurer. The meeting adjourned after the customary round of college experiences and tall stories.

Those attending the meeting were: Edward R. Downie, W. W. Fowlkes, Joe G. Glass, Jack Elton Gugenheim, B. C. Harnisch, Walter George Lehr, William Watts Palmer, Albert Steves, Jr., Albert Steves III, Sam Steves, Walter Steves II, Hall Park Street, Russell B. Wine, R. R. Witt, and Frank Hugo Wolff.

The San Antonio chapter is planning another meeting about March 1, at which time Dr. Gaines is expecting to be in San Antonio. The parents of students and prospective students, prospective students, and alumni from San Antonio and nearby towns will be invited to attend.

Louisville

THE LOUISVILLE ASSOCIATION reports two meetings. The first was a luncheon for the election of officers with the following duly installed: George E. Burks, 1927, President; M. Peel Rivers, 1933, Vice-President; Ernest S. Clarke, 1928, Secretary and Treasurer. About thirty of the faithful were there and listened to Coach Frank White, athletic director of Male High School, tell of the forthcoming basketball game between Washington and Lee and Western in the high school gymnasium.

The other meeting was held in the South Room of the Brown Hotel on Lee's Birthday as the annual celebration of that event. Thirty-two members were present as follows:

J. H. Hardwick, Charles Semple, Jr., Edward A. Dodd, R. B. Morrison, Oldham Clarke, William Karra-

ker, W. Magruder Drake, Henry K. Hill, S. Tilford Payne, Jr., Fielden Woodward, B. Lawton, Stanley P. McGee, Jr., Victor Snow, Temple Lewis, Dr. Alvin B. Ortner, Martin Kaplan, Dr. Alexander M. Forrester, John J. Davis, George Burks, Peel Rivers, Robert Stein, Norman Iler, Robert P. Hobson, Murrel D. Klein, Frank Glenn, Don Wallis, Ernest S. Clarke, Jr., Horace M. Barker, Ernest B. Walker, Edward Matz, Robert Foree, and Lawton Calhoun.

In addition there were three fathers present, namely: Mr. Alfred T. Bishop, father of Alfred T. Bishop, Jr.; Mr. A. C. Krieger, father of Alfred C. Krieger, Jr.; and Mr. Luther Stein, father of Robert Stein.

Mr. Mattingly was guest speaker and made a most interesting talk concerning various activities of the university and the aims of the faculty and trustees for the future. His talk was of particular interest because of his intimate association, in his capacity as registrar, with the students and his knowledge of many amusing incidents in their lives. All were delighted to see him and greatly appreciated his braving the elements to come.

New York

The Washington and Lee Alumni Association of Greater New York held its annual dinner and election of officers at the Lafayette Hotel, New York, on December 8, 1939. About fifty alumni residing in the New York area attended, including Judge Edwin C. Caffrey, past president of the General Alumni Association. John Drye, Jr., president of the New York Chapter, presided.

This meeting was one of the most enthusiastic held by the New York alumni in recent years. It was made even more so by the presence of a delegation from Lexington consisting of Dr. Raymon T. Johnson of the Washington and Lee Law School, who delivered the principal address, Alumni Secretary "Cy" Young, and Coach "Tex" Tilson. Messrs. Young and Tilson also made brief addresses dealing with the fields of their respective specialties, namely the alumni program and the plans for the athletic department.

In his address, Dr. Johnson outlined his idea of the university's future. His address was received with decided approval and was the subject of many comments afterward.

The following officers were chosen after report by the nominating committee headed by Bill Owen: William Moseley Brown, 1914, president; Nelson W. Burris, 1926, vice-president; Edward W. Lee, 1914, secretary and treasurer.

The following are members of the Council for 1940: Ethan Allen, 1931, James A. Castner, 1929, Carl A. Foss, 1920, Roy J. Grimley, 1921, E. W. Poindexter, 1923, Clarence L. Sager, 1914 (former president of the General Alumni Association), Fred deR. Strong, 1935, Haven Walton, 1931, Stuard A. Wurzburger, 1928.

The New York Chapter is making plans for a very active year and hopes to make a tangible contribution to the interests of the University in this section of the country during 1940. Monthly luncheons are held on the first Wednesday of the month at Planters Restaurant on Greenwich Street. In addition, a new experiment is being tried in the form of monthly suppers at the Midston Club, Thirty-eight Street, especially for those who cannot attend the noon luncheons. The suppers are held at 6:00 o'clock on the third Wednesday of each month. All visiting alumni are invited to attend these gatherings.

In addition to the above, the annual beer party has been set for February 16 and the annual dinner-dance for the latter part of March. The Council is holding frequent meetings, and the class agent plan for the 1940 commencement season will be vigorously supported. An attempt will be made to get each of the more than four hundred alumni living in the Greater New York territory to make at least some contribution to the University through his class agent this spring.

Those present were: Ethan Allen, Thorton W. Allen, Rayford Alley, Seth Baker, Holbrook Barber, William S. Barker, Morris T. Booth, Irving Bricken, Leigh Bullock, William Moseley Brown, Nelson Burris, William R. Burton, Edwin C. Caffrey, James Castner, John Dyre, Jr., Holmes Dyer, Carl A. Foss, Roy Grimley, Dr. S. F. Hampton, John J. Hudak, H. Harrison Huster, Stimeon Hyde, Prof. Raymon Johnson, William E. Johnston, Edward W. Lee, Jack G. Marks, Allan McDowell, George McGeory, J. N. McNeill, Dr. C. W. McNitt, John Micklus, Jr., Graham Morrison, William T. Owen, W. J. L. Patton, Emmet W. Poindexter, J. L. Powell, H. W. Roberts, Jr., James Salinger, Henry Sherwood, Jr., Dr. R. T. Shields, Jr., John Spohr, Fred Strong, William Tallyn, Warren E. Tilson, Haven Walton, Thomas A. Wilkins, Clark B. Winter, Stuard Wurzburger, and Cy Young.

Washington

The Washington Chapter of the Washington and Lee University Alumni Association gathered at the Raleigh Hotel on December 15, 1939, for its usual Fall meeting. This meeting was held in lieu of the annual Fall smoker. This smoker generally preceded the football game with University of Maryland, which was cancelled this year due to the fact that Thanksgiving Day was advanced a week by Presidential edict.

After the business of the meeting was terminated, the gathering was favored by a short address by Max Farington, director of athletics at the George Washington University. He told the group about the new athletic relations which have been entered into by the two institutions. While the number of contests engaged in was quite a surprise, the fact of a home-and-home arrangement in their football relations was quite an agreeable one and one which this group greatly favors. It will be the first time in some years that Washington and Lee University has played in Washington, and the local chapter wishes to commend the athletic directors for the arrangements.

In conclusion, our guest speaker, Cy Young, gave a very entertaining and informative talk. His presence at the meeting was greatly appreciated, and we hope, with his continued interest in this chapter, that it will flourish as it should. Cy pointed out the desirability of keeping contact with the University, and that all the cooperation possible should be afforded to our respective class agents so that he may advise other alumni of our progress.

Prior to the foregoing speeches, the annual election of officers was held. The chapter again honored Richard W. Hynson, 1906, with the presidency, and elected W. O. Burtner, 1917, to the vice-presidency, and J. A. Hanly, III, 1934, to the position of secretary-treasurer. The former incumbents of the last two offices were favored with selection on the executive committee, which committee also was augmented by the appointment of Brian Bell, 1911. As the official representative of this chapter at the forthcoming meetings of the Alumni Council, Charles Suter, 1923, and Brian Bell, 1911, were selected.

Alumni present at the meeting were: Richard W. Hynson, Charles Suter, Marshal Nuchols, Brian Bell, Edmund C. Campbell, W. O. Burtner, F. P. Guthrie, Alexander M. Walker, A. D. Trundle, Eugene E. Krewson, Wallace Werble, O. C. Bell, Howard C. Owings, Don Dunlap, Preston Moore, Melville Cox, Frank Price, Kenneth Routon, Stuart Miller, Harold Weston, Graham N. Lowden, Ben Clarkson, Hillard Harper, Wilson Roach and John A. Hanley.

Danville

The annual meeting and election of officers of the "Old Belt Association" was held at the Hotel Danville, January 6, 1940.

The meeting was called to order by the president, Dr. C. H. Wilson. After supper was served, business was resumed. The following were elected officers for the coming year:

R. Paul Sanford, president; Jack L. Neal, vice-president; W. R. Taylor, secretary and treasurer; and Dr. C. H. Wilson, alumni committeeman, all of Danville, Virginia; the executive committeemen at large were John G. Boatwright, of Danville, and Wm. F. Stone, of Martinsville, Virginia.

Speeches were made by Cy Young, alumni secretary, Captain Dick Smith, graduate manager of athletics, Tex Tilson, head coach of football, Riley Smith, assistant coach of football, and Harold Cunningham, new basketball coach. Other visitors were Mr. A. A. Booth, secretary of the Danville Chamber of Commerce, Dr. Richard Fowlkes, president of the Richmond Alumni Chapter, Mr. John Oliver from the Richmond News Leader, and a number of students.

All other business having been finished, the meeting was adjourned. At this point all the members went to the City Armory to see the Washington and Lee-Wake Forest basketball game.

Those present were: Wm. F. Stone, Waldo G. Miles, Chas. M. Wood, Jas. W. Perkinson, Jas. G. Watson, Z. V. Johnson, Jr., R. Paul Sanford, J. P. Penn, Jr., Jack L. Neal, Billy Wiseman, W. Preston Harper, H. S. Pierce, M. Milton Herman, Dr. C. H. Wilson, Ernest E. Franklin, David L. Ragland, John W. Gibson, Jr., P. K. Miles, J. G. Boatwright, E. B. Bagby, Jesse W. Benton, Lindsay Moore, W. R. Taylor, Lea Booth, Murray Rippe and Henry Roediger, Jr.

In Memoriam

WILLIAM BULLITT DIXON, LL.B. 1884, died on November 24, 1939, at his home in Louisville, Kentucky. He had practiced law there for many years.

BENJAMIN F. SLEDD, M.A. 1886, died January 4, 1940. For many years he had been Professor of Education in Wake Forest College, North Carolina.

He says: "The problem I selected for my Ph.D. thesis turned out to be one of great interest, particularly on account of the very unexpected results, and it has been discussed in British, German and Russian scientific journals. Having about three years' start on the problem, I am now having fun writing answers to these discussions—several of which are not in agreement with my conclusions. However, other discussions confirm portions of the work, particularly the more radical portions. Regardless of Hitler and various similar gangsters, the scientific fraternity is international. A German has given me some of the best support, offering great praise. The problem involves the application of mineralogy to the biochemistry of teeth and bones. The argument concerns a most unique crystal structure which has been postulated on the basis of X-ray and chemical determinations, together with the manner in which these measurements have been interpreted."

Who Owns Washington and Lee?

Some of you who are receiving this issue of the Washington and Lee Alumni Magazine have had it thrust upon you. You didn't ask for it—but you got it anyway. Maybe you never heard of it before. If so, you're exactly the people we've been looking for. We want you to know about the Alumni Magazine.

Probably there are alumni who feel that their relationship with Washington and Lee ended at the moment when they left the University. It was like stopping along the road on a motor trip where you bought a dollar's worth of food, departed, and never thought of the place again. At the college you bought four thousand dollars' worth of education—just a stone along the road of the good old days.

But is it that simple? Dr. Gaines was once floored by the question, "Who owns Washington and Lee?" There is no answer to a question like that—it's too complicated—but certainly no group has a stronger claim than the alumni. The ownership is not commercial, but it is real.

The Alumni Magazine will keep you in touch with this intangible possession of yours; it will inform you about the friends you made in college—people you know so well who now seem to be lost forever. It will tell you what is going on among the undergraduates who are now in your abandoned shoes, and even about the old faculty who are still fumbling about in their harmless pursuits!

For many who will receive it, this copy is a sample. If so, we hope you will want to see some more. There's a subscription blank below. Five dollars to the class fund brings the magazine for a year. The regular subscription price is two-fifty.

Contributors to Alumni Fund in 1939

The Washington College—Washington and Lee University—Alumni Association was formed June 25, 1840—hence this is our centennial year and we are anxious to make it the best in our history.

In a recent check we have found that 2,170 men have contributed to the Alumni Fund in the seven years since its inception, some of them continuously, and the others more or less regularly. In this centennial year we would like to hear from all of these men again, but more especially from the large number who have not responded in the past. Even a nominal contribution from each of these men will assure us of a centennial year worthy of the great traditions of Washington and Lee.
