Have You Replied to Your Class Agent's Letter ?

When we received a copy of the following letter which was sent by the Charleston, West Virginia, Alumni Chapter to all of its members, we thought it was such an excellent statement of the Alumni Fund situation that we are reproducing it here.

Washington and Lee Alumni Association

CHARLESTON, W. VA.

DEAR W. and L. ALUMNUS:

That the United States is in a war is a fact. However—the fact that your own University is waging a war of its own for survival may raise some question in your mind. If, after you have read this letter and that of your Class Agent's, you are only partially aware of the seriousness of this situation, our purpose will have been more than fulfilled.

Since Pearl Harbor, students of the University have responded to the call to arms like many other loyal Americans and as a result there are some hundred fewer students at the University at this early date. No one need be told that even this comparatively small number has left a considerable dent in the University. Financially speaking, this means that the University is operating on approximately $30,000 less than it ordinarily does. That it will lose more students next year and the year after is only a well presumed fact.

W. and L. is a privately owned and operated school, as you all know, and the University has always relied heavily on its investments from endowment funds to operate as a first-class school. That this income will diminish, no one doubts in times such as these.

From these roughly assembled facts, and these are only a few of many, you can readily see that W. and L. is in for an uphill fight, and on the basis of these facts alone, we urge and request you to sit down today and respond to your Class Agent's letter, sending him what little assistance you can. Your University needs your help more than ever. We feel you deeply respect the part W. and L. has played in your life and that you would more than welcome this opportunity to express your genuine appreciation. This is your opportunity. Sit down today and answer your Class Agent's letter and at the same time lend what financial aid you feel possible to the University. Whether you can aid financially or not, answer your Class Agent's letter today.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN M. CAPITO, President

About Our Covers

The front cover this time shows what is beginning to be called the "back campus." This part of our grounds has always been here of course, but changes of the past few years have given it an entirely new appearance.

The most striking of the changes is obviously the remodeling of the old library whose familiar dome has been replaced by a facade more in keeping with the rest of our architecture. The back of Newcomb Hall, visible at the left, is not quite the same as it used to be. Reid Hall remains unchanged at the right.

Looking back from the point where our photographer stood are the printing shop (formerly the power house, now removed to the other side of Woods Creek) and the Chemistry Building. Opposite them, across a pleasant strip of lawn and trees are the new Law building and the back of the main building. It is possible that some day this part of the campus will be almost as famous as the rest, since the view towards House Mountain can and ought to be fully exploited.

The picture was taken by William S. Latz, '43.

We Do Our Part

(Preface to the Annual Report of the President)

THIS war is the chief and the startling fact of our dismal day, but war is the recurrence of an old chapter in the story of Washington and Lee. Over and over again, during the nineteen decades of the institution's life, the bugles of a national involvement have sounded, near to us or afar. It is not on record that the school ever failed to prove responsive.

Today those bugles blare again, and they blare throughout the world. On every continent and on every sea and in the remote quarters of the measureless blue, the call to combat sounds. Whatever else be said of this struggle, its dimensions exceed anything in the history of America. It is our largest war and it is our costliest war. Issues at stake are the most fundamental known to humanity; and the duration of this war is the extent of time required to settle decisively those issues.

It is a war which makes not only a complete call upon national man-power but also a demand for the most swiftly and adequately trained competences of that man-power.

Washington and Lee is rooted in two great convictions, adherence to the American ideal of social organization, adherence to the Christian ideal of life. Disloyalty to either of these, our heritages, would terminate the reason for our existence as an institution of learning or a center of influence.

Since it is these ideals that ultimately are threatened, this University cannot be indifferent to the deeper implications of its duty. Every activity and every person on our campus now moves in the shadow of this war. It is, of course, a matter of deep regret that the world has found no better way than war to order its problems; and it is a matter of wild regret that these boys of ours must go immediately into this brutal conflict, which is not of their making. But if our country is in peril, Washington and Lee must have its part in the campaign.

It comforts me to recall—and you will allow me to remind you—that in the confused and somewhat aimless years of the last decade, when on many campuses of our country there were the bewildered groups of students organized into little clubs that would now be called “subversive,” there was not only no such group on this campus, there was not even a student of that disposition, so far as I ever knew. When these little clubs, or similar organizations, were seeking to organize student “strikes,” a protest in effect against legally constituted authority, there was not only no such strike on this campus, there was not even a suggestion of such a strike that I ever heard.

There was no fanfare then and there is no stage play now; but General Lee's school has sustained its convictions and now it would express its deep determination.

The Colonnade and How It Grew

By SIDNEY ISENBERG, '42

(Editor's Note: The following article on the history of our principal buildings was written as a term paper for Art 201, a course in the history of art taught by Colonel T. A. E. Mosely. We are publishing it because we are sure that many alumni will find the story fascinating. Though we have not bothered with footnotes, it should be acknowledged that much of the material comes directly from the WASHINGTON AND LEE HISTORICAL PAPERS.)

development of harmony, and the final unification of these dissimilar edifices into a pleasing, homogeneous group possessing architectural simplicity and dignity is analagous to the corresponding periods of growth through which the nation passed; and it is not at all surprising that the histories of the two institutions are in many respects almost parallel.

Though the germ of the University has been traced as far back as the first half of the eighteenth century, it was not until shortly after the turn of the succeeding century that the present site came to be occupied, and only then after fire had destroyed the former building. The new site was the property of Andrew Alexander, Esq., and his land adjoined both the old site and the town. The trustees of the embryo academy accepted his offer, and in exchange for his house (a plain, two-story dwelling which stood where the president's house now stands) and two acres of land by the town, he received the old site with its remaining buildings, and then sold to the academy an additional thirty acres of land at the rate of sixty dollars per acre. The trustees were now ready to build. Confronted then as they have always been even down to the "LAUS DEO, it looks like an American college!" Thus exclaimed William Stevens, noted traveller and author, after viewing the Washington and Lee University campus. "Fortunately," he continues, "no well-meaning millionaire has come this way to cumber the ground with imitation English perpendicular towers, mullioned windows and fan vaulting. Perhaps some day American college presidents will wake up to the fact that it is not necessary or even desirable that every campus be made to look like a corner of Oxford University." An Englishman reiterates what Mr. Stevens says: "If this scene were set down in the middle of Europe the whole continent would flock to see it."

Behind the facade of these colonnaded structures standing majestically in military alignment along the crest of a slope, the soil of which has forever been enriched by the footsteps of the countless famous personages who have trod thereupon, is a story steeped with all that is characteristic of Virginia, the old South, and colonial America. The tale is rich, and magnetic, and heart-warming. The individual construction, the gradual present day with the problem of limited financial resources, the board planned their construction program to obtain the most suitable and useful type of structure for the smallest amount of money possible. Economy has forever been their watchword.

The plan called for the erection of three buildings—a large central edifice and two wings. It was determined to erect the wings first and to postpone the main building till a more convenient season. Construction was begun in the spring of 1803, about six months after the old building had burned, and the new buildings were ready for occupancy in 1804. The new structures were well proportioned and fronted on the line still adhered to as the front line of the present buildings. These wings were about sixty yards apart, and as well as I can ascertain, the East wing occupied the site where now stands Tucker Hall, and Newcomb Hall rests on the site of the West wing. Each building was seventy-five feet long by twenty feet wide and two stories high, with two cross passages and four rooms in each story. They were exact duplicates both within and without except for the merging of two upstairs rooms of the East building into one for an assembly room or Chapel as it was called. Altogether there were fourteen rooms which accommodated the students and tutors as classrooms and dormitories for a period of twenty years.

The trustees named the two buildings Graham Hall (the eastern) and Union Hall (the western). They were of brick from the foundation and were hastily constructed. The brick and the masonry were of bad quality, and walls near the ground began to decay within ten years, requiring repairs to sustain them. Within two decades after they were built they became so dilapidated as to threaten speedy ruin, and by the aid of battering rams made from the joists of the buildings, the students succeeded in demolishing the structures after the center building was completed some years later.

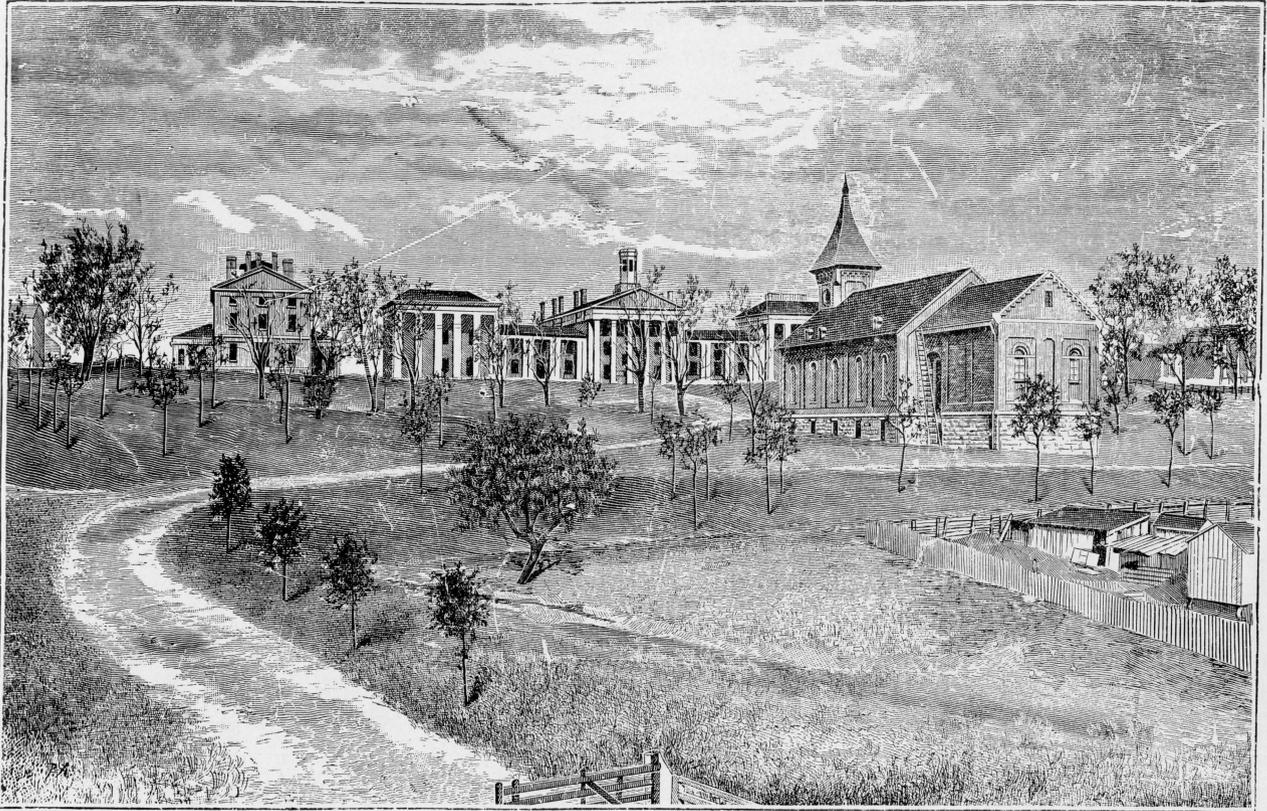

Realizing the decadent condition of these buildings, and their inadequacy to accommodate an enlarged student population, the trustees began in 1821 to consider the erection of the center building. John Jordan, a local "master builder," submitted the lowest bid for its construction and it amounted to $9000, a sum more than double the apparent resources applicable to this purpose. A Mr. Samuel Darst is mentioned as a partner of Mr. Jordan, but there is no indication as to who might have designed the building.

Jordan's bid was accepted on the twelfth of October, 1822, and construction was ordered to begin at once. The cornerstone for the new building was laid in the spring of 1824, the occasion being celebrated by a remarkable ceremony, devised and executed by "Jockey" Robinson, friend and benefactor of the institution. I must digress momentarily to recount a part of the ceremony which historically, if not rightfully, is as much a part of the building as are the columns, not to mention the humorous element connected with it:

"For the laying of the cornerstone of this building 'Jockey' Robinson had sent from his Hart's Bottom place a barrel of his fifteen year old whiskey. Robinson was the only man who would have been indulged in a Bacchanalian libation to Pallas, nor even would he have been permitted, had it been foreseen that the offering would be converted into a Circean potation. The barrel contained forty gallons of the finest whiskey that the old Rockbridge sun ever shone upon. This was set up on the campus and, though the authorities looked on with some disfavor, Robinson was too good a friend of the college to be treated with discourtesy. Some of the trustees and faculty members did not partake, but among the spectators was a large contingent of the 'tight brigade.' Mr. Robinson inaugurated the ceremony of leading officials of the college to the barrel. For a time, some courtesy, in the order of approach, was observed, but the thirsty multitude soon broke through all restraint and, armed with pitchers, dippers, buckets, gourds and basins, some of them more handy than nice, rushed for the barrel and soon gave a glorious exhibition of what free whiskey can do. The agonies of thirst impelled them to the onset, which was irresistible. Before they could complete the process, the barrel was upset and the wreckage about the place, human and inanimate, suggested a battle-field. Robinson was much embarrassed, for he had intended the gift for the elite and not for the rabble. His estimate of the capacity of the elite was most generous."

The building itself was completed and occupied in the autumn of 1824. Its dimensions are given as fifty by one hundred feet, ascending for a height of three stories. The columns in front according to the original plans were intended to be square and very large, but round columns were submitted for them, no reason being given for the change. At first there was a second story porch in front, but it was removed after a few years on account of noise. The interior, but for a few recent changes, was much the same as it appears today. The hall or Chapel, as it was called by the professors, occupied the entire front of the building on the second floor as far back as the stairways; and in height included the third story. Across the north-east end of the room extended a stage, and at the opposite end was a gallery which was entered from the third floor. The cupola on top of which "Old George" stands was not originally present, but was to be a later addition. Their subsequent appearance will be revealed in detail shortly. The building was described as a "handsome, well proportioned structure, a Maison Quarre, like the state capitol, but without a high basement."

It was 1831 before another building was erected along the front line. The growth and enlargement of the library and museum, the chemistry and physical departments necessitated a new building which would suit the demands of these growing departments. It was erected southwest of the central edifice and for a time was called the Lyceum though generally referred to as the Science building. It now bears the name of Payne Hall. It was originally intended to be two stories in height, but upon the recommendation of the building committee it was raised another story. The upper story had quite a low ceiling which eventually was arched, and the portico now attached to it is also of later date. A large railed platform was placed on top of the hipped roof. For more than one hundred years the interior plan remained with a large and small room on each floor and a common stairway at the east corner. This condition was altered slightly during the huge remodelling program of 1936. Though I have found no records to verify this statement, I have observed from photographs that the west side of this building was a solid brick wall; the windows have since been added.

The first structures which were built in 1803-4 were finally razed to the ground during 1835-6. Two low one-story brick buildings were erected on their sites. Each had rather small lodging rooms in a straight row, all opening on the pavement. "No one claimed for them any architectural beauty, but it was thought they possessed some advantages over more elaborate structures. First, they gave twelve lodging rooms at minimum cost. Second, the lack of porticoes, halls and passages was a great protection against disturbing noises. Third, the plan of having the only windows in the rear, and only transom lights in front, shut off the distracting sights of the pavement, the front lawn, and the town. And fourth, each building being a plain rectangle without projections and without void spaces within, afforded but little cover for the skulking mischief maker."

There was no important building program carried out for the next five years. Not until 1840 were any new buildings determined upon. At that time a maximum of $8000 was provided for such purposes, but within less than two years this amount was temporarily increased almost three-fold to $22,000. I say temporarily because the trustees and particularly the treasurer of the College during this period were no different from their predecessors, and they too held firmly to the purse strings. When the board became deadlocked on the question of building, the president of the College, recognizing the necessity for additional accommodations for professors and students, cast the vote which decided the issue. He explained that he was willing to leave the appropriation at $8,000, but was urged to more liberal provisions by professors who offered to build houses for themselves on College Hill (now University Place) and allow the board to return the money in six annual installments. The board agreed to three houses to cost "not exceeding $3,500 each, including outbuildings and enclosures and it was ordered that a fourth dwelling should be erected for the use of the president."

It does not appear that any professional architect was employed to plan the buildings or supervise their erection—professors being entitled to the credit of planning the president's and professor's houses. These are the four dwellings grouped anterior to the front line of the main buildings, two on the East side, and two to the West. It cannot pass unnoticed that the gentlemen comprising this committee, though not architects, were possessed with some knowledge of the Greek classical style. This knowledge combined with their appreciation for proportion and symmetry is evidenced by the perfect balance these houses create with respect to the academic buildings and themselves. That the homes on the ends have flattened roofs, the two next to them pointed roofs, forming as it were uplifting lines which lead the eye to the academic buildings—a bit of excellent artistic subtlety—is a fact which is not known as a conscious effort on the part of the committee.

In addition to the four dwellings the board decided to erect a three-story building east of the center one, and it was to correspond with the Science building on the west in exterior shape and dimensions. Two connecting buildings two stories high were to be erected between the two three-story buildings and the center building. Here again no architect was employed, but the buildings were erected under the supervision of a faculty committee which designed them for dormitories; but subsequently the one next to the Science building was changed into the Chapel. The new three-story building and its connecting wing was, like the Science building, to have a front of 53 feet in width and a depth of 33 feet and to stand 49 feet from the center building, the wings to occupy the intervening spaces. This gave a Chapel on the west side of 49 feet front, 30 feet depth in the clear and the clear height of two stories, with a gallery on the front wall reached by an inside stairway.

Alexander and Gibbons were directed to construct the buildings in 1841 and to have them ready for occupancy by the following year. The bricks to be used in the construction were to be made on the College grounds. In connection with the new buildings, a portico was ordered prefixed to the Science building and a cupola was erected on the top of the central building. The figure of George Washington on the cupola was sculptured by a Lexington carpenter, Mathew Kahle, out of a big hardwood log that he found in the James River in 1840, but four years elapsed before it was hoisted to its place of honor. A prodigious thickness of paint over the original wood now preserves "Old George" for all time.

Someone on this faculty committee, I strongly suspect, was beginning to recognize the necessity for an architectural unity in the buildings, and the addition of the portico to the Science building was the first apparent step forward in an attempt to bring about some form of harmony. How and why the use of round columns flanked on either side by square ones was adopted, I have not been able to discover. It has been brought to my attention that the decoration on the New Providence Church at Brownsburg, the Church which gave rise to Augusta Academy, the germ of the University, makes use of this scheme. Though the present church was erected in 1859, after the University colonnade was built, there were other structures which preceded this one, but any attempt to prove this statement has failed because of the lack of supporting evidence. It is a fact that the two institutions are related in several respects, but to create a direct association between these two schemes is, to me, mere speculation.

This group of buildings just constructed was admired and thought to be especially suitable for college architecture. After their completion the board ordered that they should be designated accordingly:

The center building to be called the Graham building.

The west square edifice to be called the Robinson.

The east square edifice to be called the Cincinnati.

The edifice between Graham and the Cincinnati the Baxter building, and that between Graham and Robinson the Chapel.

But these names were no more recognized by the students than those given the new buildings in 1804. The boys dubbed the new three-story building Paradise, while the wing connecting it with the center building was called Cat Tail. The three story building on the west side (corresponding to Paradise on the east) was dubbed Purgatory.

Newcomb Hall was the next structure to be added to the buildings along the front line. Its erection was made possible by the donation of Mrs. Josephine Louise Newcomb, in memory of her husband, Warren Newcomb, a patron of the University. For a time her gift remained in anonymity and the structure was known only as the Library building, since the library was to be housed here. A Mr. Nielson was the architect and a Mr. Leyburn was the contractor. An issue of the Southern Collegian bearing the date 1882 describes the building as "more than useful" and "greatly ornamental" to the campus. The building is three stories high, and the library was to be housed in the rear; it was only one and one-half stories in height. It was lighted on the third floor by a sky light. A very elaborate moulding on the outside seems to have struck the editors with much "awe." There were two such mouldings, one at the top and another at the center, and the editors felt that they added greatly to the appearance. As originally constructed the building did not have columns, but some years after its erection, Professor D. C. Humphreys, head of the engineering department, felt that it should be brought into harmony with the other buildings, and so undertook the job to erect a portico supported by four columns. Why he should have chosen four large round columns in place of the six smaller ones which supported the portico in front of the center building is not known to me. In 1936 the whole interior of this building was renovated and rearranged.

On the northeast corner of the front line where once stood one of the first two structures erected in 1804, Tucker Hall was built in 1900. It was the third edifice to be erected upon this site. This building was to be the home of the law school and was to serve as a memorial to John Randolph Tucker, long identified with the University. The Calyx of 1899 states that the walls of the building were of broken-ranged ashlar masonry of the beautiful local grey limestone, and it was told to me that a special stipulation was made for it to be built of "enduring Rockbridge limestone." The building, two stories in height, was advanced some thirty feet in front of the present front line and occupied a ground space of 96 by 80 feet. The structure was typically Romanesque.

Dr. Harry Campbell once remarked to a friend who has passed it on to me: "Horrible as it was it served its purpose as it showed the folly of lack of architectural planning." In 1934 it caught fire and burned to the ground.

Old Tucker Hall was replaced by a modern three story structure, designed and patterned after Newcomb Hall in its exterior appearance. It was restored to the proper front line and brought into complete architectural accord with the other buildings. With the restoration of Tucker Hall, absolute unity was at last achieved after one hundred and twelve years.

"So slow the growth of what is excellent
So hard to attain perfection in this nether world."

There have been other structures erected on the campus in addition to these buildings, but their history is not related to the front group. Some of them are famous in their own right, especially Lee Memorial Chapel, designed by General Robert E. Lee himself. The old Carnegie Library with its dome has left an interesting tale behind it, and eventually I desire to incorporate these accounts into this paper.

It has been said that a group of buildings on a properly designed campus has an art and a life value, which the students will assimilate unconsciously. Whosoever penned these words must have been an alumnus of this institution, though I really do not know. For surely no visitor ever gazed upon this sight that he did not carry away a lasting impression, and certainly no student ever walked through these columns that from that day on his life did not feel their influence.

A Hero of World War II

LANSON DITTO, '42, is one of the first of the Washington and Lee heroes of this second world war.

Ensign Ditto, a native of Paducah, Kentucky, was anti-aircraft control officer aboard the aircraft tender Langley when she was attacked and sunk by three waves of twenty-seven Japanese bombers in the Pacific recently.

When his ship was going down, Ditto dived from the flight deck and was rescued by the naval tanker, Pecos. Later on, when the Pecos was attacked and sunk also, Ensign Ditto kept afloat for seven and a half hours by means of a life belt, though he had received shrapnel wounds and burns from bomb flashes. Finally he was picked up by a destroyer.

While he was floating, Ensign Ditto helped keep up the spirits of the other survivors. It was said of him by C. J. Hindus, radio man on the Langley that he was a "little dynamo of energy. He and other officers cheered the men up, kept us together, and kidded us about how much liberty we'd have the next time in port. Why, 75 or 100 of us floating there in the water were entertained for an hour at Ditto's antics as he played with a dead flying fish."

According to his sister, Ruth Ditto, who recently visited him in San Francisco where he was recuperating, "He was the last man off his deck when the ship sank and he called to the others to keep close to each other, as they swam around in the water, because in that way they could have a better chance of fighting off the sharks or protecting each other from other hazards. They managed to cling to a few wooden boxes which had been thrown overboard and in this way they kept afloat for several hours."

The destroyer which picked Ditto up took him to Australia, whence he was transported to this country as soon as he was able to be moved.

Campus Comment

By WALT DOWNIE, '42

WAR has come to the Washington and Lee campus in the form of an accelerated second semester, a shortened examination schedule, a two-day Finals dance set, and a summer session with coeds.

As part of their contribution to the war effort, Washington and Lee students took part, on April 10th, in an "Offense Bazaar" sponsored by the women of Lexington and held in Doremus Memorial gymnasium. Mrs. Francis P. Gaines, wife of the president of the University, was chairman of arrangements.

Music, dancing, food, "Bingo," fortune tellers and sideshows combined to produce an afternoon and evening of varied entertainment for students, VMI cadets, and townspeople. Popular professor "Jimmy" Barnes acted as master of ceremonies. Music was furnished by the Washington and Lee "Southern Collegians" and the VMI "Commanders."

The Bazaar was a huge success from all angles making a $1200 profit, which was contributed to "Bundles for America."

With students and professors leaving in increasing numbers to go to the defense of their country, and "acceleration" quizzes flying thick and fast, Washington and Lee students cannot help but realize that there is a total war going on.

Campus activities, however, have been little affected by the situation. The hottest spring elections in years, featuring an out and out two-party conflict, resulted in the election of the following officers for the 1942-43 session: President of the Student Body: Lee Kenna, Charleston, West Virginia; Vice-President of the Student Body: Felix Smart, Pine Bluff, Arkansas; President of Fancy Dress: Bev Fitzpatrick, Roanoke, Virginia; President of Finals: Jim Daves, Blanche, Tennessee.

At the "Offense Bazaar"

The Washington and Lee traditions on conventional dress, speaking on campus, and the honor system will be upheld during the summer term. A summer Executive Committee will be in operation to see that the time-honored customs do not die. When asked what would constitute conventional dress for girls, Student Body President Howard Dobbins, to the disappointment of the 140 boys registered for the summer session said, "Slacks, shorts, and bathing suits are definitely out."

The army and naval air forces have removed about 20 boys from school this semester. The Naval Reserve's class V-7 and the Army Air Force reserve has accepted 40 or 50 undergraduates and deferred them pending receipt of their degrees. The general attitude of Washington and Lee students seems to be expressed somewhat like this. "I'll go when they want me, but I want to finish my education first, if possible." There have been comparatively few impulsive patriots leaving school in order to get a crack at the enemy.

The Senior Banquet of 1942

The Class of '42 waiting for mess call

IN SPITE of war, woe, and worry, your Association undertook again this year to entertain the graduating class at the Annual Senior Banquet, and all of you are to be congratulated on the feast you provided. To some, it may seem that annual banquets for college seniors have no place at such a time, but there is always the answer that even in war we must prepare for peace and that even these young men you see in the accompanying pictures, resplendent in tuxedos for a moment before they appear in uniform, are going to be Washington and Lee alumni and that they, as much as their predecessors, have a right to be properly initiated into that select company.

Representing you in the Pine Room of the Mayflower Hotel on the night of April 29th were Cy Young, of course, as general factotum, your president, John Morrison, '25, as toastmaster (and he did a grand job), and W. Carrol Meade, '25, of your board of directors.

Dr. Gaines gave what he described as the same old speech he always gives on this occasion with added remarks on the unfortunate subject closest to all of us. (The address was definitely not the same old one except in that it had the same old excellence of all the president's talks so well known to most alumni). Howard Dobbins, '42, president of the student body this year, answered for the seniors in a speech well worthy of his Phi Beta Kappa key, not to mention his varsity monograms. Cy then had to explain the mysteries of the Alumni Office which he did well in spite of the anti-climax occasioned by the necessarily expository nature of his remarks.

Permanent officers elected this year were: Walter G. Downie of Sander-son, Texas, as president (Academic School); Howard W. Dobbins, Louisville, Kentucky, vice-president (Law School); and Thomas A. Clark, Atlanta, Georgia, secretary (School of Commerce).

The Senior Class is to be congratulated on the fine group of officers elected to serve for a term of five years.

Business School Convention Held Here

By C. TOM GARTEN, '42

AN EVENT of national interest was the twenty-fourth annual meeting of the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business which opened its three-day convention in conjunction with the triennial convention of Beta Gamma Sigma, national commerce and business administration honor society, on April 23 on the Washington and Lee campus.

Representatives from the 55 schools holding membership in the AACSB, coming from 34 states attended the convention. The commerce school of the University is a member of the Association, and the local chapter of Beta Gamma Sigma was host to its national convention.

During their three-day visit on the campus the educators heard speakers of national prominence tell of the part the university school of business are expected to play in the war effort.

Rueben A. Lewis, Jr., '16, was the main speaker at a banquet held the evening of April 23. At present publisher of the magazine, Finance, he formerly was Washington representative of the New York Journal of Commerce, vice-president of the Continental, Illinois Banking and Trust Company of Chicago, and vice-president of the Metropolitan Trust Company of Chicago. He received his A. B. degree from Washington and Lee and while here was editor of the Ring-tum Phi and a member of Alpha Tau Omega social fraternity.

Other speakers at the convention included Undersecretary of Commerce, Wayne Chatfield Taylor; Dr. Stacy May of the War Production Board; Leo M. Cherne, editor-in-chief of the Research Institute of America; and Major Robert B. Coons, assistant chief of the manpower division from the National Headquarters of the Selective Service System at Washington. Dr. Francis P. Gaines welcomed the members of the Association to the Washington and Lee campus at the banquet on April 23rd.

Dean G. D. Hancock of the Washington and Lee school of commerce was in charge of local arrangements for the convention and was assisted by Professors L. K.

Johnson and L. W. Adams. Students of the school of commerce assisted in the registration of the delegates.

HERBERT G. DOLLAHITE, II, '32, has been in the hotel business since graduation and seems to have worked about everywhere there are hotels, from Mississippi to Maine; from Mobile to Memphis; from Memphis to St. Jo! In May, 1941, while he was filling an important position at the Mayflower in Washington, he received and accepted an offer to become Assistant Manager of the Royal Hawaiian Hotel in Honolulu. Since the beginning of the war and the taking over of his hotel by the Navy, he has been commissioned a Lieutenant (jg) and will be retained as special adviser to the Naval Charge d'Affairs.

Rueben A. Lewis, Jr., '16

IN MARCH, the Alumni Office was very happy to receive a letter from Mr. John Flournoy Ponder, 1867, the oldest living alumnus of the University.

Mr. Ponder, who is ninety-five and a resident of Los Angeles, writes a letter which shows little trace of his age. Though he recently suffered a severe fall which almost resulted in a broken back, and though he has been confined to his house as a result of his injury; though he complains of bad eyesight and says he has been visited by recent misfortunes, he shows a strong interest in the life around him and in the latest in the long series of wars that have occurred during his life.

We only wish that Mr. Ponder were able to return to Lexington and contrast the present campus with the one he knew seventy-five years ago.

The Treasurer of the Student Body Fund reports that he has on hand several copies of the Calyx for the years 1935, 1936, 1938 and 1939. Any Alumnus who wishes to have one of these may obtain it by writing to Sam Rayder, Treasurer of the Student Body Fund, Lexington, Virginia. The price is $2.75, delivered.

Major Spring Sports for 1942

By MARSHALL JOHNSON, '42

Baseball

With only two wins in nine starts prior to the four-day trip to Washington, Georgetown, Maryland and the Quantico Marines, it is needless to say that Washington and Lee's baseball team has not achieved much success thus far this spring.

Boasting an anemic batting average collectively of .188, the diamonds have had few bright moments since the two opening games of the season in which they tied Virginia once, 0-0, and defeated the Cavaliers once, 6-4.

Since that time, the nine has scored only one win in seven starts, that an 8-7 decision over William and Mary when Harry Baugher, sophomore shortstop, blasted a long triple with two out in the ninth inning to drive in the winning run.

The failure of the Generals to come through seems to lie least of all with the pitchers—Jay Cook, Ev Schneider and Captain Pres Brown—who have performed notably with a few exceptions.

After the first two encounters with Virginia, the Generals suffered two defeats on their eastern trip to Richmond, 11-7, and to William and Mary, 10-2. Sophomore outfielder Carl Johnson provided the highlight of the trip by blasting a home run with the bases loaded against the University of Richmond.

In the next game Virginia Tech took one of the steps which eventually led to the Big Six championship by handing the Generals an 8-2 licking.

William and Mary provided a temporary halt to the losing streak, but it was started again by the Lynchburg Senators of the Virginia League who took the Washington and Lee baseballers into camp, 9-2.

Virginia Tech provided the next beating, 2-1, in one of the best games seen on Wilson Field in the last couple of years as the Gobblers formally clinched the state crown. Jay Cook allowed the Techmen only four hits, half as many as the Generals accumulated, but Tech bunched two of them with two walks to sew up the ball game in the fourth inning.

A 12-3 loss absorbed at the hands of Richmond's Spiders closed the home season of the Generals just prior to their starting on the Washington trip.

Only one regular has been able to maintain a .300 average this year, that being third sacker Teddy Ciesla who is hitting .333, for five games. An injured ankle kept him out of the other four. The next ranking hitter is Harry Baugher with a .278 mark.

The Brigadier nine, boasting hitters but few pitchers, closed its season with a record of six wins and four losses, thanks largely to the hitting of Sam DiBlasi, Ken Hovermale, Ed Harlan and Jack Kibler.

The first two boys maintained averages all season of close to .500 while both Harlan and Kibler finished over the .300 mark along with Stan Carmichael.

Lack of capable pitching led to most of the yearlings' defeats as they averaged over ten hits and nine runs per game. In general, the team looked fairly good, and several of its members will be valuable additions to the varsity next year.

Wins were scored over Clifton Forge High School 10-9 and 10-9; Augusta Military Academy, 5-4; Buena Vista High School, 5-4 and 16-5; and VPI freshmen, 13-3. Losses were suffered to Bedford High School, 14-7; A. M. A., 12-9; Virginia freshmen, 13-12; and Staunton Military Academy, 12-5.

Track

Continuing the unsuccessful vein of the baseball team, the track squad ran into hard luck in the shortage of members and absorbed three straight defeats before participating in the Big Six meet.

Losses were handed the General runners by Richmond, 69-57; William and Mary, 72-24; and Virginia Tech, 97-29. At the same time the freshman trackmen were gaining a 57-57 tie with Richmond's yearlings and bowing to the VPI frosh, 74-43.

Heading the performances for the season were those by Captain Bud Yeomans, Lillard Ailor, Hank Woods and Chuck Wooters. Yeomans was high scorer for the season with 42 points.

Yeomans competed in the high and low hurdles and the broad jump in all three meets and also ran the 220-yard dash in two of the meets. He won a total of six first places and four seconds.

Wooters won both sprints against Richmond, had a bad day at William and Mary and was shut out, and then placed second twice to Virginia Tech's Paul McMullin.

Ailor, captain-elect of next year's team, took second in the shotput against Richmond, took first in the shot and second in the discus against William and Mary, and garnered first in the shotput against Virginia Tech.

Hank Woods, competing in the discus, racked up two firsts and one second. He set a new Washington and Lee record for the discus with a throw of 137 feet, one inch against Richmond, only to see John Griffin of the Spiders come through with a heave of 154 feet, which eclipsed all existing state and Southern Conference marks.

The only other first place taken by the Generals was in the javelin at William and Mary, won by Ken Rippetoe. Others who competed during the season were Walt McLaren, Jay Silverstein, Earl Brown, Sam Graham, Bob Lawton, Frank DiLoreto, John Schofield, Tom Ulam, Bob Hite, Hal Keller, Walt Pope and Jack Roehl.

Pacing the freshman trackmen were Pete Figgatt, Chip Miller, Ellis Moore, Pinky Norman and Dyke Norman. Figgatt took firsts in the sprints and broad jump against Richmond, but a bad ankle caused him to drop out against VPI after taking second in the 100-yard dash.

Miller took first in both hurdles events and the pole vault in the Richmond meet, and then came back to take one first and one second in the hurdles against VPI as well as tying for second in the pole vault.

Moore won the 440 against Tech and placed second in the 220, after failing to place by running the half mile against Richmond. The Norman brothers were consistent point-getters in both meets in the shot, discus and javelin.

Others who competed for the yearlings included Dick Corbin, Phil Page, Jack Dowdey, Ray Prater, Maurice Miller and Bill Otter.

Tennis This year's tennis season, which should have been among our most brilliant, turned out to be a disappointment because Fred Perry, who had expected to be our coach again this year, was prevented from taking the job by the injured elbow he sustained in Madison Square Garden during the professional tour last winter.

Undaunted by this blow, the tennis team went ahead without any coach and did a creditable job nevertheless. They played five matches in all, winning one with Emory and Henry 5-4, but dropping the other four to Virginia and Hampden-Sydney, each twice, and all by the same score of 4-5.

Mr. Perry expects to come back next year as coach of the team which he gave excellent training in 1941.

The students participating this year were Jack Barrie, captain; John McCormick, William Phillips, Ralph Taggart, William Allison, Clarence Ballenger, Richard Spindle, and James LaPlante as manager.

Golf Probably the most successful of the spring sports this year was golf, in which a strong team composed of Bill Noonan, captain and No. 1 player, S. L. Kopald, Jr., Gordon Sibley, Felix Smart, and Bud Bowie played eight matches, won four, lost three, and tied one. The winning scores against The Citadel, William and Mary, V. P. I., and Davidson were 16½-1½, 16½-1½, 15½-2½, and 16-2. Their defeats were by the Apprentice School, 11-7; Virginia 12½-5½, and Hampden-Sydney, 10-8.

Oddly enough their greatest triumph was the 9-9 tie with Duke. Duke's team has been unusually strong for a long time and hasn't lost a match to a southern team in years.

The prospects of next year's team, according to Cy Twombly, our stellar golf coach, are bright.

HENRY H. STAEHLING, '36, is sales representative in the Jersey City office of the International Business Machines Corporation. It has been announced that he is qualified for membership in the company's 1941 Hundred Percent Club of Sales leaders, and executives.

In Memoriam

1941

THE manifold tragedies of war were emphasized for Washington and Lee this month when Robert S. Boyce of the class of 1941 was killed in a mid-air collision near Orlando, Florida.

Boyce was piloting an army pursuit plane when his machine collided with a bomber in full flight.

Bob entered the Army Air Corps as an aviation cadet after his graduation here last spring. He was trained at Randolph Field, Texas, and at Key Field, Meridian, Mississippi, before being ordered to the Orlando Air Base.

Last year, as his contemporaries well remember, he was co-president of the Cotillion Club and head of Spring Dances. He was also captain of last year's varsity swimming squad and a member of Omicron Delta Kappa. He was a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon social fraternity.

1938

ROBERT TURNER MORISON was killed in an automobile accident near Gate City, Virginia, on the seventh of March.

Associated with his father, A. Kyle Morison, he was a member of the firm of Morison and Morison in Bristol, Virginia. He had been practicing law in that city since his graduation.

His wife, an infant son, his parents, two sisters and a brother survive him.

1924

DR. PAUL B. YATES, assistant professor in the department of anatomy at Ohio State University was killed in an automobile accident on April 26th near Bucyrus, Ohio.

After graduating here, Dr. Yates studied at Johns Hopkins from 1926 to 1928 and took his M.D. at Ohio State in 1935.

From 1924 to 1926 he was an instructor in biology at Washington and Lee. He then taught the same subject at Baltimore City College from 1928 to 1929 and was named assistant professor of biology at Ohio University in 1929. He became instructor in anatomy at Ohio State in 1930 and was promoted to associate professor in 1936.

He is survived by his wife, four sons, his mother, and two brothers.

Robert S. Boyce, 1941

1917

HORACE SUTHERLAND, outstanding attorney of Galax, Virginia, and former judge of the 21st judicial circuit, died in his office of a heart attack on March 6th.

Judge Sutherland attended Roanoke College for three years before receiving his law degree here. His classmates and contemporaries will remember him as a member of the football team and as a prominent figure on the campus.

His wife, the former Sarah Hicks Rhudy survives him, as well as three sons and a brother.

1896

HOWARD VERNON CANTER, for thirty-two years a professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois, died on March 13, 1942.

After his graduation from Washington and Lee, Dr. Canter, a native of Winchester, took his Ph.D. at Johns Hopkins and started his teaching career as an instructor at Notre Dame College in Maryland. After that, he was on the faculty of the University of Missouri before going to Illinois. From 1915-1926, he was also Assistant Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. During the last war he served with the YMCA in Italy and was awarded a Gold Service Medal by the Italian government.

As a scholar, he contributed greatly to learning in his field. As a teacher, he left a lasting impression upon the many students who studied under him.

He is survived by his wife and one son.

1876

FRANKLIN BROCKSON, 76, former member of the Delaware legislature and the United States House of Representatives died at his home in Clayton, Delaware, on March 16th.

A native of Blackbird Hundred, Delaware, Mr. Brockson taught school for some time after obtaining his L.L.B. here. After being admitted to the bar, he served in the General Assembly from 1908-1910 and in the United States House of Representatives from 1913-1915, as a democrat.

He is survived by a sister and two brothers.

Weddings

A MARRIAGE notice in the Boston Gazette for March 12, 1770, read: "Last Sunday evening was married here Mr. Daniel Shaw of Marlborough to Miss Grace Coit of this town, a young Lady embellish'd with every Qualification requisite to render a married life agreeable." We know that even more than this could be said about the following weddings:

1901

DR. DOUGLAS SMITH ANDERSON to Miss Marjorie Harrison in New York City on April 25th. The couple will be at home after the first of June at "Rock Crest," Ogunquit, Maine.

1929

DR. ROBERT HARDIN WILLIAMS to Miss Andrea Newcomb Brown last February at St. Andrews Church, Wellesley, Massachusetts.

1934

LIEUTENANT (JG) CHARLES AUSTIN PRITCHARD to Miss Martha Lee Upshur last March in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Norfolk, Virginia.

1936

LANE BAIRD to Miss Miriam Parish in Tulsa, Oklahoma, on April 28th.

1937

ENSIGN KENNETH GORDON DUSTIN to Miss Mary Elizabeth Lee, place or date not announced here.

1938

ALFRED MILTON MORRISON to Miss Carolina Spencer Foulks in Houston, Texas, on the 24th of April.

LIEUTENANT (USA) ROBERT MITCHELL WHITE, II, to Miss Elizabeth Finley Moore at the Trinity Episcopal Church, Columbia, South Carolina, on February 25th.

Campus Comment

One junior tried so hard to finish his education before being drafted that the other day a letter came to him from his local board in a small Oklahoma town. It read something like this: "When you registered for selective service you said you were a pre-law student. In February you were deferred because you wrote that you had changed to pre-med. Now you write that you are taking a CPT flying course and ask to be deferred again. We wish that you would make up your mind."

DR. TODD DEVAN, '33, is a member of the surgical staff at Tilton General Hospital, Fort Dix. Having secured his commission as 1st Lieutenant in the Medical Corps after his graduation from the University of Pennsylvania in 1937, he volunteered in October, 1940. After special army training at Walter Reed Hospital and elsewhere, he has been promoted to the rank of Captain.

FREDERICK DE R. STRONG, '35, is now an Ensign in the supply corps of the navy. After three months of active duty, he has been ordered to the Supply School held at Harvard University. His address is: Navy Supply School; Hamilton A-23; Soldiers' Field; Boston, Massachusetts, where he would be glad to hear from other members of his class.

KENNETH G. DUSTIN, '37, was commissioned in the Naval Reserve as Ensign on April 14, 1941, after flight training at Squantum, Massachusetts. Last February while acting as instructor to a cadet at Jacksonville, Florida, his plane went into a spin and fell into the St. Johns River. He and his pupil were both rescued unhurt by another cadet, who swam out to them.

ROBERT E. BERRY, who attended Washington and Lee from 1924 to 1926, is the author of a biography on Nathaniel Bowditch, which, according to reviews, is "earnest and readable and packed with illuminating detail."

Yankee Stargazer, the name of Berry's work, explains fully the Salem (Massachusetts) navigator's life and the significance of his The New American Practical Navigator, which is still being used by the United States Hydrographic Office, though it was first published in 1802.

Mr. Berry is employed on the staff of the New York Times.

Class Notes

1896

GEORGE G. STILES is proprietor of "Edgewood Training Farm," Rome, Georgia.

C. CABELL TUTWILER has a beautiful country place, "Brushwood," near Lexington and enjoys meeting his friends who return for Finals and other university celebrations.

CHARLES E. HEATER is an orchardist near Point of Rocks, Maryland. After leaving Washington and Lee he worked in Baltimore for five years, then west as far as Alaska, for another six years, and then back home to the farm. He has been successful and happy.

1898

W. O. BROWNFIELD is Clerk of the Circuit Court of Lee County, Opelika, Alabama.

ROBERT HITE TURNER lives at 3372 Stuyvesant Place, Washington, D. C. He is Assistant Pardon Attorney, Department of Justice, where he has been since 1918. He complains that he does not like to write a handwritten letter as his wife says he expresses himself better through the medium of a stenographer, but he has done a far better job than most, and next year we would like to see if he can improve, via the stenographer.

1899

WILLIAM C. WATSON lives at 45 Smith Street, West Haven, Connecticut. He reads The Alumni Magazine and other bulletins sent out from the University and always looks for the mention of any of his classmates.

WILLIAM W. DOWNEY of Martinsburg, West Virginia, is now a member of the West Virginia Board of Control with offices in the State Capitol Building, Charleston. He still maintains his offices and residence in Martinsburg.

In the past we have tried to include in the Class Notes some mention of every man from whom a class letter was received. Now that it has become necessary to reduce the number of pages in the magazine, we are eliminating the names of men from whom no new information was received. Since the information may be a year old, the addresses have probably changed anyway. The names left out are not forgotten. We'd like more information, though.

1901

FRED WHITE began to attend Washington and Lee 47 years ago, where, it will be remembered, he received many collegiate degrees. He was associated with the steel industry in Pennsylvania for 35 years and retired on July 1st. His residence is now Roanoke, Virginia. His oldest son is out of college and is employed by the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation, Pittsburgh. His second son is in a preparatory school, and his youngest son is in high school at Roanoke.

1902

H. B. GRAYBILL, after spending many years in educational work in China, returned to this country some years ago and is now Professor of Education, Greenbrier College, Lewisburg, West Virginia.

1903

CLEMENT A. BOAZ deals in city property and farm lands in Fort Worth, Texas. He advises his class agent to come to Texas and see a great segment of God's country before going to heaven.

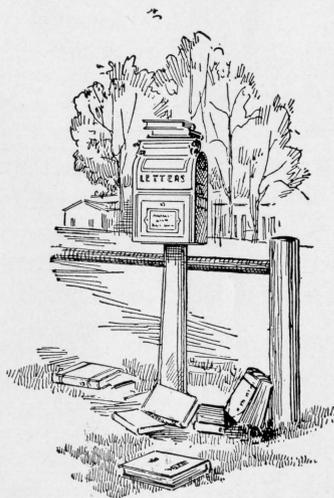

A. C. BURKHOLDER says he is still on the job he has held since 1915—Professor of Economics and Sociology in Southwest Texas State Teachers College, where his son received his A.B. degree last May, and a daughter, her M.A. degree two years ago.

1904

ROBERT L. KOLB is a construction engineer, 25 East Third Street, Frederick, Maryland, where he has been for the past thirteen years.

1906

J. ROBERT SWITZER is Clerk of the Circuit Court of Rockingham County, Harrisonburg, Virginia. His daughter was married about a year ago, and his son is a 1st Lieutenant at Fort Meade, Maryland.

CLAUDE P. LIGHT is Assistant to the Prosecuting Attorney of Wood County, West Virginia, Parkersburg, and is legal adviser of the County Court, which has probate and finance problems. His home is at 916 Juliana Street, Parkersburg.

1908

ANDREW G. BRIGGS is in the farming and poultry business at Locust Dale, Virginia.

W. P. HOOPER is minister of the Highlawn Presbyterian Church, Huntington, West Virginia. He also teaches Bible in Marshall College, and plays golf.

1910

E. T. BURR is an actuary for the Durham Life Insurance Company, Raleigh, North Carolina.

J. W. RADER is superintendent of the Colonial National Historical Park, Yorktown, Virginia.

JAMES M. CARSON, member of the firm of Carson, Petteway and Roman, Congress Building, Miami, Florida, had a severe illness early in the spring, but was well on the way to recovery at last reports.

1911

J. P. ALEXANDER is an orchardist and farmer, living near Fairfield, Virginia.

1912

WALTER L. HOPKINS is a member of the Virginia State Legislature, representing the City of Richmond.

CHARLES LEE ORDEMAN is vice-president and treasurer of the Mead Sales Company, Inc., (pulp and paper), 230 Park Avenue, New York. He says he is still happily married, still likes golf, has one son in Andover who, he hopes, will go to Washington and Lee, and another boy eleven years old.

CLAYTON E. WILLIAMS is still teaching law at Washington and Lee. His son, Samuel Clayton, is a student in the University. Clayton has recently turned farmer, in addition to his duties at the University; has sold his town house, and has a most attractive place about a mile from the city limits of Lexington.

1913

1914

D. C. BUCHANAN completed his third regular term, of seven years each, as a missionary of the Presbyterian Church in Japan on July 1, and sailed for the U. S. A. His son was a sophomore at Washington and Lee last year. His address, while in this country will be: care of Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church, Nashville, Tennessee.

SAMUEL H. WILLIAMS qualified as special assistant to the United States Attorney General to act as a hearing officer on appeals of conscientious objectors to entering armed service in the Western District of Virginia. His headquarters will be in Lynchburg, but he will travel throughout the district to hear appeals. He resigned as the Government Appeals Agent for Local Selective Service Board in Area 1 to accept the new post. He is past-president of the Virginia State Bar Association.

BEN SMITH, Somerset, Kentucky, comments on the modern age by saying that his Class Agent's letter, dated April 29, was received April 27, but admits that his Agent, Steve Chadwick, is a fast worker.

STEPHEN F. CHADWICK, finishing his term as head of the American Legion, is back in the practice of law in Seattle, Washington. His firm is Chadwick, Chadwick and Mills, Central Building.

BILL LOVINS has been acting as a member of the Supreme Court of Appeals since January, 1941, having been elected to a twelve year term. In his note is also an expression of his willingness to go again if the nation's danger requires it. He entertains some doubt as to physical qualifications.

1916

M. B. RIDENOUR is president of Steffey and Findlay, a large building supply and coal company in Hagerstown, Maryland.

ECHOL SPINA MARSHALL is still with the Continental Can Company, 100 East 42nd Street, New York.

He has a son, Echol, Jr., who is headed for Washington and Lee about 1948. He also boasts that he has a granddaughter born on March 1, 1941.

LYCURGUS HYRE is practicing law in Buckhannon, West Virginia.

PARKER BUHRMAN is in the Foreign Service Department, serving at present in the American Consulate, Glasgow, C.2, Scotland.

1917

MARION WILLIAMSON makes foreign and domestic veneers, Cockeysville, Maryland. He looks forward to having news of "the rest of the fellows," but gives no news of himself.

DR. T. PRESTON WHITE is now Lieutenant-Colonel White, head of a Medical Unit which has sailed for an unknown destination in the war zone.

1920

EMMETT POINDEXTER is still practicing law in New York at 120 Broadway, has a home in New Jersey, and a farm in Putnam County, New York. He has two prospective Washington and Lee applicants, Emmett, Jr., eleven, and Robert, five years old, respectively.

MAC STUBBS is a member of the law firm of Dawsey, Stubbs and Dawsey, Healey Building, Atlanta, Georgia, where he has been since finishing his law course at Harvard. He is married and has three sons, aged 16, 14 and 9.

GLEN EVINS is manager of the Lykes Brothers Insurance Agency, 205 Franklin Street, Tampa, Florida, where he has been for the past sixteen years.

publish The Advertiser, Evening; The Herald-Dispatch, Morning, and The Herald-Advertiser, Sunday.

BILL GIBBONS, JR., is Assistant Secretary-Treasurer of the Liberty Trust Bank, Roanoke, Virginia. He is still a bachelor.

WILLIAM T. ("BILL") SPENCER is practicing law in the Peoples National Bank Building, Lynchburg, Virginia. He had an addition to his family in May.

A. MERRYMAN GILBERT is a bank examiner, living in Martinsburg, West Virginia.

JAMES H. ("GANDER") BRYAN is with the real estate firm of Molton, Allen and Williams, Birmingham, Alabama. He is married and has two daughters, Margaret, ten, and Louise, four.

H. A. ("SOLLY") HARTZO is professor in the department of Political Science, Lake Forest College, Lake Forest, Illinois.

1922

HUSTON ST. CLAIR attended the dedication of the Cyrus Hall McCormick Library on May 10, 1941, and was much impressed with the beauty and usefulness of the new building. He was chosen head of the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce this spring.

1923

TED HARRIS is still writing plays and books. His address is 86 Perry Street, New York. He spends much of his time at The Belfry, Atlantic Beach, North Carolina.

R. M. FREW has been with the United States Rubber Company, Winnsboro Mills, Winnsboro, South Carolina, for the past five years. About two years ago he went into personnel work as Employee Relations Manager. He has a wife and two daughters.

H. A. AXELROTH is a successful lawyer in Philadelphia. His Class Agent writes: "I suppose you all remember that he was carrying Ching Anderson's vaulting pole through the streets of Lynchburg when the gendarmes swarmed on him, put him in the Black Maria, and hauled him off to the calaboose. A couple of us went over to the newspaper office and enlisted the aid of Carter Glass."

T. O. ("SHACK") BAGLEY says he has all his hair but it is very grey. Caught fifteen crappies on his last fishing trip. He served as a Captain in the World War. He was in Lexington on Alumni Day last year.

RAYMOND ("TOAD") SNIVELY says there is no change in his status. He is still thoroughly happy, healthy, and busy. His main interests continue to be his family, factory, and farm. He is vice-president and secretary of The Hagerstown Leather Company, Hagerstown, Maryland.

E. A. C. HOGE—Lathrop-Hoge Construction Co., 1426 Clay Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, is head of this company, where he has been for the past twenty years. He has two sons, who took their engineering course—no longer available at Washington and Lee—at the University of Cincinnati. He says: "I find that my football and rowing at college have insured my already large frame becoming still larger, so I am in the 230 pound class and show little sign of diminution in the size of my shadow."

1924

BY CLASS AGENT, OTIS HOWE

GOODRIDGE SALE, JR., is now located in Charleston, West Virginia, with the Brown, Jackson and Knight law firm. With Rock Holt and Johnnie Morrison in the same firm, he enjoys his Washington and Lee contacts. He is married and has four children.

CLARK W. ("HAPPY") RABB is in the insurance business in Memphis, being associated with Treadwell and Harry. He is married and has one son, ten years old.
