Published quarterly by Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia 24450. Entered as second class mail at Lexington, Virginia 24450, with additional mailing privileges at Washington, D.C. 20013. All communications and P.O.D. forms 3579 should be addressed to Office of Publications, Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia 24450.

In the first issue of W&L we emphasized that this would not be a "formula" magazine. This issue, containing three seemingly unrelated features, is totally unlike its predecessors.

Some readers may wonder why we would discuss campus unrest, for the Washington and Lee campus has been calm—not because its students are unaware of society's problems and the University's responsibility to help find a solution to those problems, but because the student body has the maturity to understand that violence is not the answer. We believe that the Brock Report, prepared by a Congressman alumnus of the University, is an objective and highly thoughtful study of student opinion and therefore has much to say to everyone interested in higher education.

There is an unstated relationship between "Report of Gifts" and "12 Anonymous Men." Without the interest, understanding, and substantial annual support of alumni, parents, trustees, friends, foundations, businesses, and corporations, such needs as financial aid for students, growth of the library, increased faculty salaries—not to mention the maintenance of buildings and grounds—could not be realized.

On the cover: The design on the front cover is an artist's conception of the physical unrest that haunts some American colleges and universities. On the handful of campuses that have become "headquarters" for student dissidents, it is not unusual to find paint splattered on the walls of buildings or to find obscene words and militant slogans splashed across venerated columns.

of an answer

Last May, 22 young Republican Congressmen, traveling in small groups, quietly visited more than 50 college and university campuses to find out for themselves what lay behind student unrest. Their findings and recommendations drew the praise of many members of the academic community, the press, and President Nixon.

Two Washington and Lee alumni were participants—Rep. William E. Brock, III, of Chattanooga, Tenn., who conceived and organized the tour, and Rep. G. William Whitehurst of Norfolk, Va. Rep. Brock, 38, a candy manufacturer by profession, graduated from W&L in 1953, and Rep. Whitehurst, 44, a professor and dean at Old Dominion College, in 1950.

Other participating Congressmen were Edward G. Biester, 38, Pennsylvania; John Hall Buchanan, Jr., 41, Alabama; George H. W. Bush, 45, Texas; R. Lawrence Coughlin, 40, Pennsylvania; Marvin L. Esch, 42, Michigan; Louis Frey, Jr., 35, Florida; James F. Hastings, 43, New York; Lawrence J. Hogan, 41, Maryland; Manuel Lujan, Jr., 41, New Mexico; Donald E. Lukens, 38, Ohio; Paul N. McCloskey, Jr., 42, California; Jack H. McDonald, 37, Michigan; Jerry L. Pettis, 52, California; Albert H. Quie, 45, Minnesota; Thomas F. Railsback, 37, Illinois; Donald W. Riegle, Jr., 31, Michigan; Philip E. Ruppe, 43, Michigan; Sam Steiger, 40, Arizona; Guy A. Vander Jagt, 37, Michigan; and Lowell P. Weicker, Jr., 38, Connecticut.

Of their findings, President Nixon said: "It was a very thoughtful report by men who do not have the problem of the generation gap. They are young men vitally interested in these problems, and they gave me a lot of information that is essential for this Administration to have in mind as it develops a program to deal with campus unrest."

Excerpts from the Congressmen's report to the President appear on the following pages, with an introduction prepared especially for this issue of W&L by Rep. Brock himself. Washington and Lee was not among the campuses visited, and few—if any—of the points discussed apply to the University. But the report is recommended reading for persons who want to understand better the causes of student dissent and what might be done to remedy campus turmoil.

Rep. Brock last visited the Washington and Lee campus in 1968, when he was parade marshal for the Republican Mock Convention.

By REP. WILLIAM E. BROCK, III, '53

Last spring it occurred to me that the Congress, despite a flood of speeches and legislation, was out of touch with college conditions and college youth. Because it seemed to me that the time had come to take action, I contacted five colleagues—Reps. Biester, Bush, Frey, Riegle, and Steiger—and proposed that we organize a group of youthful, concerned members of Congress to meet with students in their own element and discuss the major issues in a sincere, untheatrical fashion.

Together we set up an informal organizational structure and a few guidelines. Advance publicity was completely ruled out. The purpose of the project was to communicate with students in a relaxed, candid atmosphere—not to shoot camera footage or attract headlines. No reporters or broadcast media representatives were informed of the operation until after it was completed.

After recruiting a total of 22 members, we divided into six regional teams. In all, the six units visited 50 diverse types of institutions in every part of the country: public, private, and parochial schools; large and small schools; schools that had been disrupted and schools that had remained peaceful. We met with thousands of young people representing the whole spectrum of student views, from the Students for a Democratic Society (S.D.S.) to Young Americans for Freedom. In addition, we met with representative members of faculties and school administrations, local government officials, peace officers, and other concerned non-students whose views would prove helpful and give our findings a broader perspective. From beginning to end, however, the major emphasis was on direct contact with the students themselves.

On May 13, our volunteer advance men were in the field setting up the meetings, and on May 19 we followed. By the end of May, the tour was completed. After a conference with the President, we began to compile a report for formal presentation to the Administration and the public.

Reactions of both the President and the public have been heartening. Interest in our informal task force has continued unabated all through the summer and is stepping up as the new school year opens. We plan to follow through with further activities and are considering, at the urging of the President, making the campus tour an annual project.

Certainly, whatever else we may or may not have succeeded in doing, the campus tour gave us—and through us our colleagues in the Congress—an insight into campus conditions and the American college student which most of us had previously lacked.

Hours after we had submitted our written report to him, President Nixon announced that he was following our suggested policy of opposing any punitive legislation which would cut off Federal funds to entire institutions, penalizing the innocent majority along with the guilty minority. This was a decisive factor in defeating such legislation in Congress.

Today, in the mounting reaction to a comparatively small number of student extremists, there are frightening signs that the rift between the generations is becoming more bitter. Goaded on by sensational and sometimes inflammatory coverage by the mass media, many adults are beginning to paint all students with the same brush. With each stroke the gap widens.

Rightly indignant about the impossible demands of the extremists, adults sometimes close their ears to the voices of student moderates who call for responsible academic and social reform. This is a victory for the radicals who seek to draw the generations farther apart and drive student moderates into their camp.

Whether one's sympathies lie with students or adults, it is important to recognize this dangerous trend. Neither youthful rebellion nor adult reaction has a monopoly on truth and virtue. But the danger is that, if present conditions continue, neither view can accommodate or coexist with the other in a period of increasing tension and violent confrontation. To the extent that student and adult intolerance of each other increases, understanding will be stifled. Whatever one's political philosophy or emotional loyalties, this is a grim prospect.

Perhaps the most reasoned, sensible attitude towards the generation gap was that of Robert Frost, who wrote that he never dared to be too radical when young for fear it would make him too conservative when old. In compiling our report on campus unrest, we tried to strike this same objective balance.

from the Brock Report to President Nixon

At Washington and Lee, the October 15 Moratorium took the form of a symposium that covered all aspects of the Vietnam question.

The problems confronting higher education are so complex that no study or analytic effort yet mounted can really claim to be comprehensive. Nonetheless, we believe we achieved substantial success with respect to our main concern: the acquisition of some degree of personal understanding of the nature of the problem.

We came away from our campus tour both alarmed and encouraged. We were alarmed to discover that this problem is far deeper and far more urgent than most realize, and that it goes far beyond the efforts of organized revolutionaries. By the same token we were encouraged by the candor, sincerity, and basic decency of the vast majority of students we met. Too often, however, we saw their idealism and concern vented in aimless or destructive ways.

If one point is to be emphasized in this report it is that violence in any form, in any measure, under any circumstances, is not a legitimate means of protest or mode of expression—and that it can no more be tolerated in the university community than in the community at large.

There is on the campus today a new awareness of potential student power and the emergence of a large group—probably the vast majority of student leaders and a substantial number of intelligent, concerned, and perplexed young people—which has genuine concern over what it feels is the difference between the promise and performance of America. While these students have no monolithic leadership or single set of goals, they are fairly united in questioning many of the values of our system. The revolutionaries on campus who desire to destroy our system are few in number. However, many students can be radicalized when violence or confrontation on campus occurs. Also, disillusionment in our system by students can grow, even without violence, if we place one label on all students and fail to understand that they raise many areas of legitimate concern.

To the extent that our universities can foster an environment of trust, participation, involvement, and interaction, we believe that the danger of violent confrontation (and the emotional climate which is its prelude) can be reduced. To the extent that this nation can foster an environment of quality, excitement, and challenge throughout its total educational system, creative leadership can be developed. We can envision no greater tragedy for this nation and the free world than for us to allow our educational system to slowly settle into obsolescence, losing touch with reality and becoming incapable of responding to the needs of students and society.

This report is offered not as a panacea, but, hopefully, as a bridge to greater understanding of the problem.

FACTORS IN UNREST

In an effort to most accurately and clearly represent what students were saying and thinking on the campuses we visited, we have listed areas of concern as they were described to us by the students. In reporting student views, we are in no way passing judgment, but merely trying to convey a better understanding of what the students feel.

Where we have reached conclusions of our own, they have been specifically noted by indenting these passages so there can be no confusing the reportorial and analytical portions of this report.

INTERNAL FACTORS

Communication: On campus after campus we found widespread criticism from students who feel unable to communicate with administrators and faculty. They believe that no adequate channel is open to them to make their views known. Channels which do exist provide only limited access to individuals who will take responsibility for major decisions.

In some cases, the university structure itself seems at fault. In these instances the modern university is so large, and decision-making so fragmented, the student often finds it difficult to identify the individual or organization that has the final responsibility for a particular policy.

Operating within a large bureaucracy, administrators find it easy or necessary to avoid definitive answers to student inquiries; they pass the inquiries to the faculty, the regents, or the legislatures. These agencies in turn seem even more isolated from the student point of view and even less open to communication.

An immense frustration is built when the student feels he once again must go through a channel which is not "plugged into" the policy-making power of the university.

Charges of communication gaps are leveled against faculty, administrators, and governing boards alike. In many instances students charge that the actions of the overseeing bodies—i.e., regents, trustees, etc.—are determined by outside business and political influences. Such boards are looked upon as keepers of the status quo who make no attempt to consult with students on any decisions.

Students, in turn, seem unaware of the factors and pressures that the governing board must consider and endure.

Responsiveness: Claims of inadequate channels of communication frequently were linked with complaints about the lack of responsiveness to student demands.

This situation is aggravated where there is a lack of agreement, or of shared perspective, between administration and faculty. Despite protestations to the contrary, such circumstances are hardly unusual. Faculty and administration often are at odds on everything from the way to reply to student requests to the quality, method, and timing of university response to student protests.

When university action is taken, or problems are at least under serious review, students who are not involved in the step-by-step deliberations fail to understand the amount of planning required and the complexity involved in the solutions they propose to the university.

Since many universities do not seem to be geared to initiate or administer either quick or long-lasting change, increasing passion mounts on both sides of an issue with resulting polarization and alienation of more moderate students who may or may not sympathize with some of the basic requests.

Student Intolerance: Although most students would deny it, and many would be genuinely surprised by the charge, the intolerance of a substantial portion of students is a contributing factor to the general unrest. Often insulated from day-to-day social responsibilities and contact with other age groups, some students seldom have the opportunity to see our society solving problems or meeting human needs. In the course of study and discussion, however, they are continually exposed to society's many real failures and seeming inconsistencies. The result for many has been a combination of deep social concern and a disenchantment with traditional institutions and approaches to problems.

It should also be recognized that some of the intolerance displayed is purposeful and perhaps irreversible. The revolutionary is determined to remain unappeased in the hope of prompting administration reaction of a sufficiently excessive or violent nature to "radicalize" the moderate student majority. He must seek this goal because radicalism as a force to destroy can achieve no objectives, can obtain no real results on our campuses today without the tacit or even open support of far more responsible and moderate students who may be captured by the events of the moment. In order to be "radicalized," these students must have their emotions preconditioned by a situation (or series of situations) which would generate an initial expression of sympathy toward the avowed aims of the revolutionaries.

Hyprocrisy: Students complained that the university, like society, fails to practice what it preaches. They point to teaching and the transmission of learning as the center of a university, and contrast this with faculty efforts to reduce teaching loads in order to have more time for research. Many students claimed that students who violated rules as part of a politically motivated or anti-institutional protest were more heavily penalized than those who violated the same rules for other reasons.

They charge that academic freedom is a myth when the university's purpose and direction is "subverted" by massive infusion of funds for military and industrial research. In response to the effort to educate the disadvantaged, students charge that too few are admitted and that those admitted find the institution unresponsive to individual needs and problems.

Relevance: Underlying specific issues is a fundamental dispute about the structure of the university and its role in society. A vast gulf exists between the views of faculty and administrators and the views of the students.

It is characterized by the recently published statement of a university student:

"Most of them (the faculty) hold to the ideal that the university is a neutral institution, devoted to objective truth. But the people who have power in America have pervaded this institution. The university could never be neutral in our present society—profit-making and war-making. I'd be skeptical that the university could assume a neutral posture. The university ought to be a partisan of the progressive forces in society."

This student's view is an obvious departure from the generally-held public view of a university as an isolated tower that transmits and enlarges knowledge in the process of preparing individuals for careers. This student opinion requires that the university be relevant to our era and its problems, that it be committed to an active role as a progressive force. What is important about this perspective is that it is expounded not by a minority of revolutionaries but by very large numbers of sincere and highly motivated young people.

were equipped with billy clubs, guns, mace ..."*

For the student, a clear definition of this relevancy is very difficult, since its development is in a formative stage and its meaning changes from area to area. On one hand, for the university to be relevant, it is held that it must cease to uphold traditional "establishment" institutions and systems. In this context, many universities have seen demonstrations against campus recruiting by various corporations involved in defense contracts, against the inclusion of ROTC in the curriculum, and against certain research projects. On the other hand, it is suggested that these ties must be replaced with new commitments to support urban improvement, and the extension of civil rights. Clearly many complaints about specific course requirements are closely related to this concern for the university's relevance.

Overreaction: The student voices deep concern about methods used to respond to student confrontations. Many feel that the university has overreacted with excessive force. They point to incidents involving clubbing and gassing demonstrators and bystanders, as examples of an "oppressive system." On numerous occasions moderate leaders of peaceful demonstrations cited the subsequent inability to prevent individual acts of provocation and violence by radical students, thereby permitting a confrontation to erupt into violence. Likewise, students pointed to numerous instances of overaggressive reaction by individual law officials which had the effect of radicalizing otherwise passive onlookers, turning a relatively small-scale disturbance into a general battle.

Many individual students pointed to the Dartmouth procedure (a court injunction against the occupation of a building, and the peaceful and quiet arrest of demonstrators) as the best approach.

Lack of combined faculty-administration action aggravates a situation, and in some instances, a slow response due to a reluctance to act created further difficulties. In other instances an immediate resort to excessive force exaggerated the problem.

Non-White Student Issues: It is important to make a clear distinction between the purposes and goals of black militant students and white revolutionaries. Aside from similarities in tactics, there are substantial differences. Without doubt, the alienation and bitterness among some black students is so great that they have completely lost faith in the ability of the nation to remove obstacles to full equality. Many black student activists on predominantly white campuses, however, appear to be seeking to reform the university, to make it better suited to serve their needs and desires, to create the mechanism for training students from minority groups to go back into their communities to deal with major social and economic problems, and not to destroy the university. This is in contrast to the goal of destroying the institution held by some white and black revolutionaries. Thus black student militants have held the white revolutionaries at arm's length—forming alliances when useful but preserving their separate identity and independence. By the same token, the formal involvement of black student groups in issues not directly related to minority student problems has been, in most cases, limited.

Large Versus Small Institutions: An immediate difference appears in the ability of smaller institutions to deal with some problems more readily and with greater acuity than the multi-university. Size affects responsiveness, communications, and many other needs.

The challenge is to find ways to preserve the benefits of size while overcoming its disadvantages. We must seek ways to strengthen the ability of our universities to provide close personal relationships and the experiences available in small group settings.

EXTERNAL FACTORS

Students relayed to us deep feelings about "the System," "the Establishment," etc. The word System covers a good deal, and its components vary from campus to campus. In all we have discerned certain common threads. The System, as they define it, is characterized as follows:

Racism: The student perceives the gulf between the promise and performance of this nation with respect to race relations. He sees inequality of opportunity, failure of the educational system, and he relates these to the country as a whole as well as to the university. For the most part, we found a perceived neglect of human problems to be the single largest motivating force behind the alienation of today's student.

Military Industrial Complex: There is considerable student opposition to our formidable defense budget. Why, they ask, do funds for domestic and educational programs get cut while the defense budget goes almost unchallenged? They see a close relationship between the academic community and the military. They see university presidents sitting as members of boards of large industrial corporations. They see cuts being made in funds to hire teachers while boards of trustees authorize new buildings and facilities in order to receive greater Federal research funds.

Poverty and Hunger: The medium of television brings home to people the gap between well-to-do and the poor. There is a growing dissatisfaction on the part of students with the response of the nation to the disadvantaged. They are not willing to wait to overcome decades of poverty and racial intolerance, and they question apparent past inaction. The failure of many institutions to act with regard for the neighborhood around them has caused the student to take as his own the cause of the Harlem or Woodlawn resident.

Imperialism and the Third World: On a number of campuses a recurring question related to the role of the United States and the problems of what is termed the "Third World" (Blacks, Chinese, Puerto Ricans, Mexicans, etc.). The view expressed was that we are the imperialists in Vietnam, in Formosa, in Latin America, and that the emerging nations are a new force with whom we have not yet come to grips. Some feel we are not treating other people in the world fairly, and from the view of the student, we are paying the price of not heeding the views and needs of others. In their view, self-determination, as expressed by the United States, is a pious proclamation which relates only to those with whom we agree.

Police State: The experience of one school more clearly demonstrates this problem than any other. When the students left in the summer of 1968, the campus police wore no weapons. When the students returned in the fall of 1968, the campus police were equipped with billy clubs, guns, and mace. For a school that had experienced no difficulty, the students questioned why this was done. As violence grows, and counter-violence escalates, the student views his relationship with both the university and the outside world as increasingly beset by the police and National Guard.

Economic Oppression: The readiness of legislatures and alumni to strike back at campus turbulence seems only to reinforce the student's view that big government and big industry more and more dominate the university and society. What has happened at Peoples Park in Berkeley, on Mifflin Street in Madison, and other places, are examples of a new concern for matters outside the university, yet, in which the university plays a role. Student housing, the increases in rent rates, merchants who charge higher prices to students (as they do to ghetto residents) are examples used by students to justify their claims of oppression.

Remoteness From Power: A very large part of the alienation of students stems from their feeling that they cannot control their own destiny. Institutions are too large and too remote for the individual to have an opportunity to change that which he does not like.

Misplaced Priorities: Over and over again we heard about priorities and the feeling that these are “out of whack” in the United States. The space program, large farm subsidies, cuts in education, the defense budget, and more, all were cited as examples of the failure of our society to meet its urgent domestic needs.

Vietnam: It is apparent that Vietnam originally served as one of the major factors in radicalizing students. Many consider the war immoral and unjust. An increasing number vow to take any steps necessary to avoid military service.

It was repeatedly brought home to us by radicals and moderates alike, however, that an end to the Vietnam war would not mean an end to campus unrest—or even a major, long-range reduction of tensions.

The Draft: Coupled with Vietnam the operations of the Selective Service System serve as a significant problem among students. The present administration of the draft is viewed as totally unsatisfactory, as being unjust to minority groups particularly, and as a tool of the Federal government to enforce discipline. Faculty and students alike tend to equate expulsion from the university with compulsory service in Vietnam.

Values: Materialism: As one student put it, “This is a ‘thing’ culture, and I want it to be a ‘people’ culture.” In the midst of affluence the students see a society in which a high value is placed on material things. There is a longing for a belief, a belief in something other than material things. There is a deep conviction on the part of many students that they want to do something to help others, not only themselves. Moreover, there is a questioning of the fundamental values of our society and our system of government.

Overreaction: The efforts to control violence—as well as those steps leading to violence—too often create an overreaction on the part of all concerned. In our view there has been an overreaction on the part of students to what they consider to be the unresponsiveness of the institutions to legitimate calls for change.

In many cities, the moratorium created a non-violent confrontation between two generations.

In a violent situation, students, faculty, administration, and the community are caught in a tangled web of sympathy, fear, reaction, and frustration. The idea that campus violence comes from only a few is a myth. There are many dedicated, bright students who are concerned about the problems but who are not yet violent. They have not, however, rejected completely the view that they should resort to violence. Unfortunately, they can point to some campuses where violence has produced results.

Hypocrisy: Through all the external and internal factors runs this thread. Each campus would produce differing examples of this theme, but it is an underlying feeling on the part of the students.

The Media: Most of the people we talked with stated the opinion that superficial mass media coverage was contributing to the widening disillusionment and misunderstanding between the public and the nation's campuses. The media, particularly that utilizing the visual impression, concentrate on the dramatic, the sensational, the vivid acts of violence or disorder.

Not only does this distorted coverage inflame the worst fears and stereotypes in the public mind, but it adds to the frustrations of those trying to work for progress and constructive change on campus. The public focuses on disorders, and these have occurred with sufficient frequency to leave the impression that little else is taking place in higher education.

Although some publications and broadcasting networks have devoted substantial time and effort to excellent in-depth studies of the factors discussed in this report, more is required if understanding is to be created.

IDEAS FOR CONSIDERATION

As we learned, there is no single answer, nor any set of answers, to the problems faced by students or our society. The internal and external factors which we have tried to catalogue here lead us, nevertheless, to suggest for your consideration, Mr. President, a series of ideas which we believe merit urgent consideration.

1. No repressive legislation. Any action by the Congress or others which would, for example, penalize innocent and guilty alike by cutting off all aid to any institution which has experienced difficulty would only serve to confirm the cry of the revolutionaries and compound the problem for each university. This holds also for any action which would establish mediation or conciliation on the part of the Federal government. In our opinion, the fundamental responsibility for order and conduct on the campus lies with the university community.

2. Establish a Commission on Higher Education. In light of our findings we believe that a Presidential Commission on Higher Education would be a valuable step. Running through our report are examples of problems which students, faculty, and administrators have raised and which deserve further exploration. What is the role of the Federal government in research? What has this contributed to creating priorities within the university? How best can communication be opened and maintained? How well does this report reflect the reality of the American college scene? These and more would be appropriate questions for such a Commission which we believe should include a thoroughly representative selection of students, faculty, and administrators together with the general public. We do not foresee an investigative body but rather one which can help to create understanding among members of the academic community, as well as the general public.

3. Open communication to university community. We have found that many were surprised by our visit and by our willingness to listen and learn. There is a need to expand lines of communication. We urge that Cabinet officers, Members of Congress, the White House staff, and others in the Executive Branch begin an increasing effort for this kind of two-way street of listening, learning, and responding. Once our communication has become established it will be important to sustain it. Some of the questions raised by students were truly the kind which deserve and demand answers. Some of the viewpoints expressed by students deserve understanding. And some of the misconceptions of the system of government within which we operate desperately need correction.

4. Lower the voting age. There is no question that the American college student for the most part is better educated and more vitally concerned with contemporary problems in our country than at any previous time in our history. We feel that active involvement in the political process can constructively focus his idealism on the most effective means of change in a free society.

The right to vote will give Young America the chance to become a responsible, participating part of our system. In essence they will have the chance to put their performance where their words are. An extension of the franchise to the age of 18, when their interest is high, can help engender in our youth (and our future leadership) an awareness of the full meaning of democracy.

5. Draft reform. In line with your own recommendations for reform of the Selective Service System, we believe Congress should move to act promptly on this important issue. It is a matter which affects hundreds of thousands of American young people, and it is presently a sword over their heads.

6. Encourage student participation in politics. The overwhelming majority of students with whom we visited hold little regard for either political party. The questioning of our system of government points to a loss of confidence in established institutions and that includes political parties. Just as government must be responsive, so must political parties be responsive and open.

7. Expand opportunities for involvement. We found an encouraging desire on the part of many students to do something to help overcome the problems of our society. This dedication or commitment to help others is a hopeful, important area which should be encouraged. Specifically, we recommend establishing a National Youth Foundation. We believe this concept should be initiated in order to better utilize the energy and resources of student groups. Models of student-community involvement were found at the University of South Carolina, Radcliff, and Michigan State University, among others, and we urge legislation for experience, learning, and participation.

We also recommend establishing a Student Teacher Corps. Many more students are considering entering the teaching profession, and this idea is one which we feel should be encouraged. In concert with the Teacher Corps, the student teacher concept can be a valuable tool to tap student potential and expand the learning opportunities for the disadvantaged.

Further, we recommend increasing our support of the College Work-Study Program, National Defense Student Loan Program, and The Educational Opportunity Grant Program. These three Federal programs would be beneficial in meeting the needs of students and the institutions in responding to student concerns. They are budgeted at levels far below the authorization, and we believe they should be increased.

From the community at large, American business, which has played such a large role in financially supporting higher education, must commit human resources as well. Expanded job-opportunity programs, work-studies programs, businessmen and other community leaders teaching on campus, intern and apprentice efforts, leadership in student-community problem solving, attendance at campus forums, among others, could measurably enhance the experience-learning process.

8. Coordinate youth programs. We think it would be helpful if an effort were made to coordinate all the present youth programs of the Federal government through one central office. At the moment there is proliferation among many agencies as well as duplication of effort.

9. Perspective. There is a need to mobilize opinion and resources. A sense of perspective is lacking on the part of the students and on the part of the public. What students are saying is, in some cases, the same as what the average American is saying regarding priorities, responsiveness, and humanization. Presidential leadership, governmental concern, and communication are part of the necessary work which must be undertaken if we are to replace revolution with reform, and despair with hope. The crucial factor in the widening gap between students and others is the student's perception of reality. That must be understood by all who seek solutions. This requires of us comprehension, and of the student, understanding.

10. Balance. To take an isolated view of our universities as the one weak link in our educational system is to unfairly single out college students, their parents, professors, and school administrators.

We must remember that the average college freshman has already undergone a dozen years of formal education before he enters the gates of the university. Many of his attitudes and many of the factors which may lead him into difficulties on campus have already been implanted.

Therefore, a sweeping change in campus conditions alone is no guarantee of a return to orderly progress in our universities. There exist imperfections in our educational system from pre-school programs to graduate studies. These flaws in American education deserve the immediate and thorough attention of the nation.

REPORT of GIFTS

The following pages record the generous financial support of Washington and Lee's friends. Alumni, parents of students, corporations, foundations, and other interested persons have shared in a near record of overall giving to the University. Both the Alumni Fund and the Parents' Fund reached important new highs this past year.

The Robert E. Lee Associates continues to be the single most significant encouragement of financial support that the University has received in decades.

These contributions are not simply gifts of money. They are expressions of devotion and confidence; they are provisions for the continued excellence of Washington and Lee University.

Every year the University turns to you for this support. It always will. The plain fact is that a private university must meet a substantial part of its financial needs from giving. Without this philanthropic support Washington and Lee could not open its doors each fall. And so, the very existence of the University, each year, depends on the generosity of its many loyal friends.

THE ROBERT E. LEE ASSOCIATES

Over the long reach of Washington and Lee University's history one man stands above all others in the manner of his influence upon the institution. No student who has attended Washington and Lee in over one hundred years has been untouched by the personal ideals and the educational foresight of Robert E. Lee.

The Board of Trustees of Washington and Lee University, therefore, found it fitting that the University's most generous and loyal benefactors be brought together and acknowledged as the Robert E. Lee Associates.

Among the purposes of the Robert E. Lee Associates are these:

To enable the University to recognize and honor those persons whose support of Washington and Lee and whose enthusiasm for its role in higher education are unmistakably above the ordinary. To provide a focus of leadership that will give direction and impetus to all of the University's annual giving programs. To bring to the University each year a substantial sum of money that will be a cornerstone of strength in meeting the University's constant challenge to sustain its reputation as an institution of truly distinctive merit.

When the charter year expired on December 31, 1968, an impressive number of one hundred and seventy persons had become Robert E. Lee Associates. Of this number, seventy have now contributed for a second time at the Associates level.

In keeping with the concept that the Robert E. Lee Associates should be kept a perpetual assemblage, never closed to new Associates, twenty-five persons have become members since January 1, 1969.

The aggregate giving of the one hundred and ninety-five persons who are now Robert E. Lee Associates stands at an inspiring $651,057.40.

Annual Alumni Fund

The University's alumni every year make a collective effort to promote the ability of Washington and Lee to be excellent in all respects. The 1968-69 Annual Alumni Fund is the largest investment that alumni have ever made in their alma mater through annual giving, with the $300,000 milestone now having been attained. It is a challenge for new measures of support in the years ahead. The opportunity it affords Washington and Lee can be derived from no other source.

The Parents' Fund

Washington and Lee's parents have for many years supported the University in an unusually generous manner. This generosity has made the Washington and Lee Parents' Program a model for other institutions and has brought the University national recognition.

Under the direction of the Parents' Advisory Council, the Parents' Fund has tripled in the past two years, with the 1968-69 achievement reaching the $40,000 level for the first time. In so doing, the parents are committing themselves to the admirable and necessary effort to meet those instructional expenses not covered by tuition.

Twenty-one parents have become Robert E. Lee Associates.

Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges

Since 1952 hundreds of corporations have responded to the efforts of the VFIC to provide a means of coordinated financial support for twelve independent colleges and universities. These are Bridgewater College, Emory and Henry College, Hampden-Sydney College, Hollins College, Lynchburg College, Mary Baldwin College, Randolph-Macon College, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Roanoke College, Sweet Briar College, University of Richmond, and Washington and Lee University.

Washington and Lee has benefited greatly from the generosity of business in this manner. In 1952 the University's share of the VFIC's efforts was $2,385. This year, with the Foundation receiving total support of $1,100,175, Washington and Lee's portion stood at an impressive $97,547. In total, Washington and Lee has benefited by $900,682 in contributed funds through the VFIC since 1952.

This financial support is the type most urgently needed—unrestricted for current academic operations.

A list of the 906 contributors would be too lengthy for the space here available. Each contributor, along with the staff of the VFIC, has had an important beneficial effect upon Washington and Lee University this year.

Corporations

The listing at the right indicates those businesses that matched their employees' gifts to either the Alumni Fund or the Parents' Fund during the 1968-69 Annual Giving Year. In this manner, these corporations added $19,297.65 to the Alumni Fund and $4,881.11 to the Parents' Fund. This "Matching Gift" program is one of the most important factors in the University's gift income and represents an enlightened approach to aiding higher education by American business.

Below are listed those corporations that contributed to the University's educational work by direct grant. Numerous opportunities were opened to Washington and Lee because of this corporate support—opportunities that would have otherwise been only good ideas.

Foundations

For years one of the vital parts of the academic community has been the Foundation, whether of the small family variety or a large general purpose philanthropy. In the past, Washington and Lee has been greatly aided by foundations, a fact no less true in the 1968-69 fiscal year. The total of grants to the University from the following foundations during the period July 1, 1968, until June 30, 1969, is $342,960, not including the Virginia Foundation for Independent Colleges whose work is described in the following section.

12 anonymous men

The 12 men featured on the following nine pages represent more than 60 others who work for Washington and Lee in plant operation and maintenance, a significant segment of the University community that will require a budget this year of $585,777.

For the most part, they are anonymous men because their work calls for no public attention. They are required only to be there on time, get the job done, and move on to something else.

They line athletic fields, make beds, clean up classrooms, and carry the mail. They install electrical wire, whip up hamburgers, sweep locker rooms, and make sure doors are locked. They perform countless other tasks.

They are support personnel, at the beck and call of almost anyone. In their own way, they contribute much to the excellence of the University. Without them, Washington and Lee's efficiency as an academic community would be sorely impaired.

W&L presents a portfolio of 12 men who represent the buildings and grounds crew at Washington and Lee.

Palmer E. "Stogie" Armstrong (left), 51, has been at W&L for 15 years. As a night watchman, he has one of the loneliest campus jobs, calling for him to be on duty from 8:30 in the evening until 4:30 in the morning. He finds his recreation in hunting deer.

M. H. "Snookie" Walker (left on the facing page) first worked at W&L 41 years ago when he was only 13 years old. After a hard day as an athletic field groundskeeper, he changes hats and becomes an entrepreneur, serving as Lexington's key bondsman and having an interest in several small businesses.

C. Raymond Smith (right on the facing page), 56, has been an athletic field groundskeeper at W&L for seven years. In his off-duty hours during fishing season, you'll find him wading local streams in search of the best holes for bass and trout.

12

David A. Madison (left page), 50, was born and reared in Lexington. A campus mailman he has served W&L for 15 years. He likes to reminisce about the days when he played semi-pro football for the "Lexington Blue Devils." His two sons today are football coaches at nearby high schools.

David L. Drain (left on facing page), 38, has been a campus electrician for three years. For hobbies, he hunts deer and angles for bass, but perhaps one of his biggest sports thrills was bagging a 21-pound wild turkey.

Henry H. Black (right on facing page), also is an electrician. Just 32 years old, he has been at W&L for four years. During the winter evenings you're just as likely as not to find him at the local bowling lanes, and in the summer, on a softball diamond.

James E. Henderson (left), has been at W&L for 13 years — although he is only 36 years old. A fountain clerk in the co-op, he loves to tinker with cars and electronics when he's not reading. His liking in books runs the gamut from biography to novels, with particular emphasis on today's problems.

James C. Mackey (left on facing page), 46, is custodian for Robinson Hall. His job keeps him so busy that only evenings are open for his favorite pastime, pitching horseshoes. To make sure that lack of daylight will not interfere with his hobby he has rigged up a lighted horseshoe arena that he can use after dark.

Napoleon H. Borgus (right on facing page), 48, has been at W&L for seven years. Custodian of Payne Hall, Borgus's pride is his daughter, a student at the University of Michigan, who holds the Miss Ann Arbor title and was second runner-up for the Miss Michigan title. He has traveled much of Eastern United States and into Canada on fishing trips.

Kenneth Stewart (right), 31, is the Washington Hall custodian. In the evenings and on weekends he operates a cleaning service for local businessmen and homeowners, but he still finds time for hunting and fishing. He now has completed five years of service at W&L.

---

Raymond L. Myers, 53, has been at W&L for almost half his life — 23 years. Custodian of a freshman dormitory, he has turned his hobby, caning chairs, into a profitable sideline.

Professor of History and Head of the Department

Published by Random House,

Price: $10.00

This book is a work of devotion and painstaking scholarship on the part of the University's distinguished historian. It will have deep meaning for everyone who has shared the Washington and Lee experience. For all, it is an important record of the development of one of the nation's great institutions.

Here is the story of Washington and Lee University as only Dr. Crenshaw could tell it — from its beginnings as a small classical academy to a place of prominence in education that continues today. It is a story of crises met and overcome, of self-sacrifice for the good of the institution, of changing perspectives, of unusual educational foresight, of personalities, great teachers, outstanding administrators, distinguished alumni who personify the best of Washington and Lee.

It is a book no alumnus of Washington and Lee, no friend of Washington and Lee, no patron of higher education can afford to be without. Be sure to obtain a first edition copy. WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY
Lexington, Virginia 24450

Christmas is a time of giving . . . and the University gave early this year. In August, the aftermath of hurricane Camille brought floods that devastated large areas of Rockbridge County. Seeing the plight of its neighbors, the University took the money it ordinarily spends for Christmas cards and used it for the relief of flood victims. For this reason, you won't be receiving a Christmas card from the University this year, but you can be sure that each of us here at Washington and Lee extends to you and your family Christmas greetings and best wishes for your happiness in the New Year.
